Trouble with the 900th contact report

From Bernadette Brand

Based on a suggestion from Bermunda, who felt that the problems with the current correction of the 900th contact report should be noted and prefaced to the report, the following came about:

On November 7, 2024, in the morning, Billy brought me a data stick on which the 900th contact report was stored, which he had been working on for a week because he was already having major problems retrieving the report, as whole sections of text and individual words kept disappearing, sentences were mixed up or words were interspersed with numbers or punctuation marks, which he had to laboriously correct. When he handed me the stick with the report for pre-correction, he said that I should be careful because there may have been text repetitions and text shifts and that words and parts of sentences could also be missing. He explained this to me not only because he knew from experience that such things happen regularly when retrieving contact reports, but also because he had particularly big problems this time when retrieving the contact conversation. It was more than the usual thing that always makes his life difficult when he is writing on his computer, which he had been telling me ever since he started working on the current report.

So I took the stick and immediately started correcting it, and I soon realized that words were obviously missing and whole sentences had been mixed up so that they no longer made sense. I also came across parts of the text that appeared twice throughout the report. Twice it was 4 lines each, and the third time it was almost 2 pages. As usual, I marked these parts of the text that were repeated word for word with red and a double strike-through. As usual, I tried to fill in the obviously missing words with words that made the sentence understandable and logical, although these are of course only suggestions on my part, which Billy will replace during the proofreading process if they do not fit or do not correspond to the facts of the conversation. I also tried to straighten out sentences that had gotten mixed up so that I thought they made sense and were readable. Since I can make corrections on the computer and don't have to work on a paper printout, I mark my suggested corrections, incorrect words, duplicate text passages and incorrectly positioned parts of sentences in red and cross them out, even if they are only individual letters, numbers or punctuation marks.

Once the work was done, I gave Billy back the data stick with the corrected file so that he could check my corrections and correct them if necessary. He usually gives me the corrected file back and I check everything again before passing it on to Christian and Daniela, the two main proofreaders.

This time, however, everything was different. While I was still checking the 'corrected' file, in which Billy had inserted many individual words and whole sections of text in green, he called me and explained that I should interrupt my work because Quetzal had noticed that whole passages of the conversation that had taken place were missing and that he was coming over to help Billy with the corrections. Two days later, on November 9, I received the corrections back from Billy, with asking him to be careful when checking, because it is possible that parts of the text may still be duplicated and sentences may be twisted, and that he had written his corrections back into the file in green as usual. What awaited me then almost brought me to the brink of despair, as I discovered that not only had some of the corrections I had made been undone, but that the parts of the text marked in red and crossed out twice were still in place, but this time not red and crossed out, but black and bold! As I was aware of the urgency of the work, I checked the file until the early hours of the morning, but then threw in the towel at around 2.30 in the morning because it was just getting too stupid and too annoying. Before I retired, however, I went back into the house and was intercepted by Billy under the front door with the bad news that I could stop the control work because he would have to call up and check everything again from scratch, as the extent of the error was significantly greater than I had originally realized. He explained to me that Quetzal, Bermunda, Enjana and Florena had been with him since 1.30 a.m. and would support and help him with his work. On Sunday lunchtime, Billy told me that they had been working on the contact report until 6.30am and that they still hadn't finished. He would now continue on his own and try to finish the report. On Monday, 11.11.24, I received the file back with the comment that everything had now been checked and completed and that everything should be in order, only the words, sentences and parts of the text marked in green still needed to be corrected. In the meantime, however, I had become suspicious, which is why I decided to go through the whole report again thoroughly, word for word, just to be on the safe side, and lo and behold, I was not mistaken, because once again it turned out that errors that I had marked in red from the beginning were still there, which is why I naturally marked them in red again and crossed them out twice before giving the contact report to Billy again for checking. This time, after the third attempt, it actually seemed to have worked, because all the red and green corrections were still there and the duplicate text passages that had started all the trouble were no longer there either. What is also interesting about the whole story is that the overall size of the report remained the same the whole time, which means that the parts and text passages removed from the report corresponded exactly to the size of the duplicate text passages. After more than 6 days of tedious, exhausting and energy-sapping work, the contact report was finally ready to be forwarded to Christian and Daniela. But far from it, because in the meantime, for some unknown reason, the internet connection to the Remise had been damaged and failed, and since midday on 12.11.24 any network connection has apparently been cut for a long time!

Nine hundredth contact Wednesday

, October 30, 2024
8.23 a.m.

Enjana Greetings, dear friend, but it's a little awkward for me to come here today without asking you first if it's convenient for you, but I feel compelled ...

Billy ... don't worry about it, because I'm always happy when one of you comes here. What is it that brings you here?

Enjana The point is - it's really private - that ... Quetzal also wants to come here in about 30 minutes.

Billy Well, then I guess there's enough time to clarify the whole thing, to which I have the following to say: ...

Enjana Thank you very much for your understanding. ...

Billy That's just the way it is, and you can't just change it. So then ...

Enjana This is very helpful for me, and so ...

Billy Yes, but you can't just change it, because ... Besides ...

Enjana That is indeed the case, and you can be sure of my thanks for your advice. But now I want to go, because Quetzal will not keep me waiting, his punctuality is well known to me. So goodbye, dear friend, but I don't want to forget that Florena and Bermunda will be coming to see you in the next few days and have a lot to report. Goodbye, Eduard, my friend.

Pleiadian-Pleiarian contact reports 3

Billy I can't wait to hear what Bermunda has to report.

Enjana You know what you saw together, and Bermunda can't cope with it. She spoke to me and Florena about it, as well as Quetzal, and explained to us that she is burdened by what she has seen and doesn't know how to cope with everything. And since you are well versed in ... That's why we advised her to talk to you about it.

Billy I am happy to do so. It is really not easy to see such incidents, and it is clear to me that this is exactly what Netanyahu wants, that he can thereby realize his genocidal mania, because the fact that for the most part only women and children are killed by the Israeli military, ordered by Netanyahu, that is the purpose of the exercise, as they say. The fact that the majority of those killed are women and children, but the minority are Hamas and Hezbollah fighters, ensures that no more offspring can be conceived and born. In my opinion, the fact that so many children are murdered is due to the abhorrent fact that they are not supposed to grow up, which means that male children do not grow up to be men and cannot take up arms or wage war. This, while girls cannot grow up and cannot become pregnant or bear offspring. Only in this way - among other things - is Netanyahu's genocidal mania not thwarted.

Enjana This is indeed an argument that can be effectively real, but we have not considered this, because these kinds of degeneracies and intrigues are alien to us, so we still have a lot to learn in this respect.

Billy You are not earthlings either, so you do not know all the many possibilities of earthling ways of thinking and their degeneracies, just as I, on the contrary, have fathomed them throughout my entire life on the basis of what countless earthlings do with regard to all kinds of degeneracies. Besides, you were not here at the time of Sfath and - forgive me - despite your age and many years of being here you are somehow 'greenlings' in the matter of the degenerate thoughts and actions of the earthlings. And you still don't seem to have realized that all the degeneracy is based on the many different beliefs of the various religions and the sects that have emerged from them. This despite the fact that Arlion ...

Enjana . . . all this is unknown to us, moreover we only know a lot about you from Sfath's annals, but not very much about the thoughts and actions of people on earth. Therefore, we still have a lot of learning to do, which is what we are trying to do, namely by exploring everything imaginable on earth. This is not easy for us, because time and again we realize that we have allowed ourselves to be deceived. - But now I really have to go, goodbye.

Billy Goodbye too, and really don't worry and ...

Quetzal I just noticed that, I'm talking about the fact that Enjana has just left. Greetings, Eduard, my friend. She said what is real, and if you call us 'greenlings' in terms of understanding the thoughts and actions of Earth people, then you are right. My grandfather knew this very well and very well, as can be seen from his annals, but there are other annals that remain closed to us and which we may only open when ...

Billy Yes, you have just 'crossed paths'. Greetings too, my friend, and as for what you say about further annals, I don't know anything about that. What's your reason for wanting to talk to me and not wait until Sunday, since we agreed that you'd come back then?

Quetzal It has become important that you ...

Billy On the other hand, I can ...

Quetzal Yes, I understand that, but it turned out that ...

Billy Oh, I was already thinking that, but I don't want to write that down when I bring our conversation in and write it down, I just want to mark it with dots. But what you're talking about ...

Quetzal I'll leave that up to you, but it might be better if you ...

Billy ... yes, I think so too - let's see what can be done. And what you say about the war leaders, they are all sick in the same hospital of idiocy, megalomania, revenge and hatred, except that some are worse than others. But the truth is that the clown Selensky is a very bad and vicious war monger, who in this respect far outstrips even the senile US President Biden and will not accept peace under any circumstances.

wants. His war fanaticism does not allow him to think normally, which is already only a sham thinking anyway, because he is trapped by religious shackles - this time Jewish ones, whereas with Hitler they were somehow Christian and esoteric. As Sfath noted at the time, Adolf Hitler largely kept quiet about what his real beliefs were, so effectively no one knew what he actually believed. Sfath told me at the time that his real faith was Christian-esoteric superstitious, which is why he also affirmed the esoteric and witchcraft delusions and the research that the delusional madmen and lunatics of his 'esoteric troupe' cherished in this regard and carried out their 'research' all over the world, chasing after nebulous things. The fact that people lost their lives as a result of this nonsense was of no concern to any of the madmen, even in relation to the so-called spiritual, by which the 'spirit' is erroneously meant, which in reality does not exist and the term is completely wrong, because the energy that animates man is the energy of creation, which animates every genus and species of life forms of fauna and flora. The term 'spirit' - as the creation life energy is mistakenly called - comes from a modification of the Indo-European term 'gheis', which originally means 'to be upset', 'to be horrified', 'to be frightened', 'to be excited', 'to be afraid' and 'to be seized' as well as 'to shudder', etc.. Thus. So it also refers to the mood and the vigor or drive and the mood of the person.

The term 'spirit', however, originally comes from ancient Greek and in this form refers to the creative life energy of man, namely with the term 'pneuma'. In Latin the spirit is called 'Spiritus', and in Hebrew 'Ruach' and Arabic 'Rūh'. Then there is English, where it is called 'mind', 'spirit' and in French 'esprit'. Basically, it is an inconsistent term that is used in philosophy, theology, psy- chology and everyday language.

But in general, the term 'spirit' belongs to esotericism, although the term 'spiritual' somehow has an irrational, guesswork quality that can supposedly only be understood by 'initiates', whereas the term 'spirit' as a practical use is more of a purely theoretical nature. And if that means this question here, which was sent to me and which I was asked to put to you so that you could please answer it - what animus or anima and ying and yang mean - then I can do that too. These terms actually come from C. G. Jung, who described the so-called 'soul' of the human being as 'anima', whereby he drew a distinction between the feminine and the masculine. According to his 'findings', the anima is the unconscious male side of the woman, while the animus is the unconscious female side of the man. According to C. G. Jung, anima and animus therefore mean the factor of the unconscious of women and men that is shaped by the opposite sex.

And if I now explain yin and yang, then I have to say that according to Chinese philosophy, yin and yang are actually based on opposites in the world as a whole, such as man and woman or female and male, religiously heaven and hell, earth and water, calm and hectic. Yin and yang form the foundation of the teachings of traditional Chinese medicine (TCM). The doctrine of yin and yang also states that a balanced state is created when yin and yang complement each other perfectly and together form an absolutely perfect whole. In other words, two similar energies and forces form a whole when they join together. Unfortunately, however, in Chinese teachings - as everywhere on earth and since time immemorial - everything is divided into black and white or into female and male, with the female being depicted as black and the male as white, as is also the case with the yin-yang sign. The feminine black side is probably seen as bad, negative and sad, as darkness, but also as the soft, resting and receiving, while the white or the other side represents masculinity, the good, positive and cheerful, the light or brightness and warmth as well as active giving. I think this answers these questions of what is right. But my question is this: Do you have anything else to explain, or perhaps something to criticize?

Quetzal I can't comment on that, because I have no knowledge of what you were talking about. This C. G. Jung you were talking about - who was this man and what is or was his work?

Billy His name was Carl Gustav Jung, he died in 1961 and was a psychiatrist. I got to know him by chance at Burghölzli in Zurich, where he was working at the time - I was still a boy at the time - when I was visiting the Mathilde Escher home with my mother, where Verena, my sister, was being cared for as a severely disabled person, and I went down to Burghölzli in between because I was curious about what was going on there and went into this 'spinning wind', as they said. It was a 'lunatic asylum', a 'Spinnwinde', as the Burghölzli psychiatric hospital was called, where in 1980 I was once supposed to visit Mr. ah - - I've forgotten his name (...) and get him out of the 'loony bin' because he was going crazy with his girlfriend in Germany and was being deported to Burghölzli in Switzerland. He visited the center once, but that must have been 30 or more years ago. Now I remember that he phoned again about 6 months ago and wanted to come back. He must be 80 years old or so, about the same age as Judy Reed from the USA, who gave me the name 'Billy' in Tehran/Persia and I am the Shah-in-Shah or the King of Kings, as he is called. the King of Kings, as he called himself, Mohammad Reza Pahlavi, after which I went to West Pakistan and then to India, where I met the President of India, Dr. Radakrishnan, at the Ashoka Ashram on the Gurgoan Road near Mehr- auli, when he was present when I was and I was shot in the left arm. It all suddenly comes back to me like a movie, including the fact that I caught snakes there, a black 2-metre cobra for example, which I brought home to Switzerland and then gave to the telephone operator Heidi Näf at Zurich main station. And that I clipped the camels' pointed teeth. That also comes to mind, because I did that too, because I had to earn money to be able to live.

Quezal From your youth, you were a person who did all kinds of work, no matter how it came about, and this probably remained the case a hundredfold throughout your life. My grandfather Sfath already wrote in his annals that this would probably continue throughout your entire life. I also know from my grandfather's annals that even in your early youth you were involved in an unusually wide variety of work.

Billy That's true, and that has been the case throughout my life, as a result of which I became a so-called all-rounder.

Quetzal all-rounder?

Billy Yes, but wait a minute, I'm sure there's something written in the computer that describes what that means. Wait ..., ... yes here, you can read for yourself, because here it is ...

"All-rounder; agile, versatile, interested male person who possesses and applies knowledge and skills in numerous fields."

Quetzal . . . That's how my grandfather described you in his annals, but back then you were still ...

Billy ... yes, back then I was still a boy, a greenhorn. But as for what they write here, that also exists among women, which is denied to them again, yet I have met women who really were all-rounders. Our FIGU women, for example, worked diligently to build the center, even using pickaxes and shovels and digging trenches for electrical cables. Everything was really like that. But now I can't avoid saying that I am constantly being asked about the future and what it will bring. I was asked again from Germany what will happen politically in America and everywhere else. But I don't really want to say much about that because it wouldn't be good. What I can say, however, is that there will be a huge political row in Germany in the near future and the government will find itself in the unpleasant situation of partial disintegration. The parties are so divided among themselves that certain parties will be dissolved, and internal party intrigues will arise, which will lead to disputes and the dismissal of governments. And as far as America is concerned, everything will turn out differently than the Democrats assume and hope, because the result of the election will be something completely different and exactly the opposite of what the billions in donations for the election are working towards. The old will reassert itself and once again lead the government, although this will be less severe than what is hoped for. The new would trigger an unforeseen catastrophe that would have a malign effect worldwide, while the old will not cause this but will still be evil. So it will come to pass that ... And that is better for America and the whole world, for if ... This is to be said, and so it will unfortunately come to pass. as I have just seen and experienced together with Sfath, that ... Although the Democrats and also many in foreign states will then be shaken, what will come to pass will be the lesser evil, but will nevertheless be a heavy one. And various people in foreign countries who are partisanly in favor of the worse side will mendaciously change their 'minds' and suddenly be hypocritically 'good friends' with the winning party. This, namely when ...

Quetzal You shouldn't make that public.

Billy I'm going to dot the i's and cross the t's, because I'm also a bit adept at writing, even if it sounds megalomaniacal, as I have been since I was a teenager. -

Quetzal I'm interested in visiting some of the places where you used to work with you, jumping back and forth in time of course, so that I can see and experience what you went through. In particular, I would be interested to hear about the special features of your night watch work, as well as your earlier work when you occasionally carried out cash transportation and personal security in addition to your night watch work. I would also like to know how you washed gold tinsel out of a river - if that is possible - together with you. I'm also very interested in how you swam across the lake from Fällanden to Greifensee on the opposite side and back again with just one arm, as you once told me. Also your piecework

I would like to see the sewer construction and oil tank cleaning that you carried out independently. In fact, I would be able to get a real impression of how you led your life in this way.

Billy We can do that if you ever find the time.

Quetzal I will.

Billy Good, I'm always available. Just let me know when you can.

Quetzal Some of what you told me during our conversations, that you were there with my grandfather in times gone by, like at Lake Titicaca more than 3000 years ago, then in the Far East, where the art island of Seranok ...

Billy But I can't write that down when I recall our conversation, I have to dot the i's, because I promised Sfath back then, when we were 'rummaging through' the past, that I would keep quiet about what really happened. Our palaeontologists, who deal scientifically with the animal world, the animal world and other living creatures that moved independently, as well as with the plant world, but also the geologists with the rocks of the past ages of the earth, but also with the life of fauna and flora of prehistoric times, etc., I should not influence them by telling them what really happened. This also applies to archaeologists and prehistorians, who deal almost exclusively with the legacies of earthlings, because I should remain silent towards them and say nothing, just as I should not say anything to palaeontologists. One of the reasons for this is that they want to know everything better and would accuse me of fantasizing or even lying anyway. This was actually proven when I told Gloor - who I told you about - that Charles Darwin had based his theory of ape-human evolution on a fraud. A great many archaeologists, prehistorians and palaeontologists have gotten it into their heads that their professional beliefs - in addition to their religious beliefs - do not allow them to believe that reality and the whole effective truth was different from what they present in their assumptions and fantasies. The fact that there were life forms on earth in its early fauna and flora that palaeontologists cannot even imagine or fantasize about does not even enter their heads, because many believe that they have not only swallowed the wisdom, but also the complete history of the fauna and flora of prehistoric times with shovel excavators. They do not even know - just like evolutionary theorists - what the real course of the earth's history was like, especially not the formation of the earth and its creatures, because the claims consist only of assumptions and conjectures that are only partially true, as was the case with the giant asteroid that triggered a world catastrophe millions of years earlier. Even ancient and very ancient civilizations are wrongly dated contrary to effective facts and claims are attributed to them that are effectively just made up out of thin air. The same applies to all genera and species of living beings, for in fact many things are largely misrepresented, such as how living beings were first created at certain times or disappeared again because they became extinct, etc. The same applies to the evolution of various genera and species. Also how the most diverse genera - as the earthlings call the sexes - of fauna and flora changed as a result of foreign mutations and how many different species emerged from this, whereby new faunas and floras were formed again and again over the course of time, i.e. new animal forms, as well as animal forms and self-moving life forms. New plants also evolved, from the tiniest moss and the tiniest plant known today, much smaller than the pin-sized flowering plant dwarf water lily, which is 0.1 to 0.2 millimetres in size, to the mightiest tree, today's giant sequoia (Sequoiadendron giganteum), which can grow to a height of 130 or even 150 meters. Also worth mentioning is the coast redwood (Sequoia sempervirens), which grows in the Redwood National Park in the USA and can reach heights of 100 meters and more. These are primeval sequoias, but they can still be found today.

However, another prehistoric tree has been found, namely the Wollemie tree. It still grows in a secret place in Australia, where around 100 trees can be found. A secret location because it is feared that madmen might want to feast on the trees by stealing the seeds and getting rich by selling them, etc. The Wollemie tree - which can grow to a height of 15 to 20 meters - is an extremely rare species of conifer that was long thought to be extinct, forming entire forests around 100 million years ago. This primeval sequoia (Metasequoia glyptostroboides) is also known as Wollemia nobilis/Wollemi pine/dinosaur plant.

And what I also want to say is that the primitive technology that exists on earth today and which earthlings think is valuable for progress only leads to people slowly but surely withering away and becoming stupid. In my opinion, the progress of technology, like all related things, has taken place far too quickly and too early, because it has created an unparalleled dependency for humanity - to which even small children are addicted - which later degenerates to such an extent that it is no longer possible to live without the latest technology. All the futuristic things that have already emerged worldwide in this respect were invented far too early and spread around the world.

Quetzal You are quite right in your assessment, for all the technology that exists today and all that is in use was brought forward in time and understood by man on earth between 1600 and 2000 years ago, depending on what it is about. As a result, man on earth is not yet able to deal with everything futuristically invented and handed out to him and its use and consumption in a rational and sensible way, but only in forms that are no more than playful, neglectful, comfortable, spoiled and stupid.

Billy Just say it, namely that the whole thing is stultifying and stupefying, as well as that it leads to sedentariness, comfort, carelessness, laziness and lack of interest etc.. The same happens with independent thinking, which is increasingly sinking into belief in a higher power and thus in an imaginary God, because on the one hand many leave the churches and distance themselves from them, consequently the number of believers in churches, temples, mosques and other places of worship dwindles drastically, but those who deviate from these places of faith remain believers and continue to believe in their imaginary deity. This, as Christians believe in Jesus Christ or the Savior in addition to God the Father; believers in Islam in Allah; Jews in Elohim; Zoroastrians in Ahura Mazda; then Voodoo believers in Bondye and Mawu-Lisa; and the Hinduists in Brahma, Daksha as well as Hiranyagarbha and Indira, etc.; as well as the Maori in Rangi, and the Bahai in Ulläh, etc.

So the delusion of belief in God nevertheless remains and increases, even if, for example, in Christianity hundreds of thousands leave their churches and other places of worship as well as groups and associations etc. every year. In addition, believers in God are replenished by descendants, so despite the decrease in the number of believers in places of worship, there is an increase again. And this results, especially in Christianity, in the fact that at certain times - such as Christmas, Easter and All Saints' Day in particular - vibrations of faith spread very blatantly around the whole world - which are stronger than any vibration of electricity - and have a strong negative influence on people, in such a way that they - without knowing why or where from - become confused and unhappy, alienated from perception, inattentive and aggressive etc. and react in this way. This is particularly pronounced in Christianity, because at these times an enormous number of prayers are 'sent to heaven', especially by Catholics, because they are more deeply anchored in the religious delusion of faith than Protestant believers. Of course, the same is also true of other religions and their special religious days, but these do not have such a harmful and influential effect on people because they are fewer in number. According to your most precise calculations, this list shows that the number of believers in Christianity is 2.578,000,016 billion; believers in Islam 1.636,000,004 billion, with the number of the delusional believers in this religion growing very rapidly as a result of state support. Hinduism has 1,262,000,009 billion, and Buddhism, as I see from the list here that Bermunda brought me yesterday, has 348,203,004 followers. This, while Zarathustra or Zoroasterism has just 29,416,001, as shown here on this list.

Quetzal That will be the case, because Bermunda is very precise with her information.

Billy To what extent all the believers of these religions and their numerous sects, which probably number in the hundreds or even thousands, count as fanatics, I am of course not in a position to judge, but according to Bermunda it has been established that America is the worst country on earth in terms of religious fanaticism and fanatical religious sects. This, as well as with regard to racism and the numerous criminal organizations, but also with regard to murderous criminal organizations, some of which even give themselves the guise of Christian religion, but which are in the habit of committing dastardly murders, e.g. ... The racist organization of the Ku Klux Klan is also still up to mischief, as are various right-wing extremists who not only form groups but also organizations and also carry out their mischief, which can even lead to murder and where flags with swastikas are used.

But now I have strayed very far from what I wanted to say. In addition to everything I have already said, it must be said that in Germany, too, the same kind of idiots are at work in the government as everywhere else, only in a different way, namely all those who enforce their primitive-stupid neo-Nazi attitude alongside the righteous in the government. People who are in bondage to America, Selensky supporters and Netanyahu fanatics, as well as imbeciles and the stupid who are in bondage to these war criminals, who supply Selensky with weapons and money so that his warriors, who are probably no better than he is, can continue to murder and spread misery, misery and destruction etc. And the fact that people are complaining that military personnel from North Korea will soon be appearing on the Russian side against Zelensky - it is he who is fanatically waging war - is more than just partisan idiocy, because the fact that Zelensky has so and so many foreign military personnel fighting against the Russians - even Russian traitors, as well as the Swiss, etc. - is not being complained about, but the war fanatic and war monger Zelensky is being praised to the skies. So there is partisan grumbling and different measures are used depending on the partisanship.

However, I would like to express my thoughts on the whole of what you have said, which I do not want to reproduce in writing, as you now also think and I should put dots, especially with regard to the 4 main ones, which in my opinion are the most important.

In my opinion, they are unscrupulous war-mongers and should be named as such at present. These are Putin, Netanyahu, Zelensky and Erdogan, whereby I see the mass murderer Netanyahu as the worst war criminal of all, who is on a par with Adolf Hitler and his henchmen and does not put them and their henchmen in the shade. Of course, Hamas and Hezbollah should also be mentioned, because here too the whole thing is an unparalleled society of murderers, and that really cannot be overlooked. There is also a lot to be said for Persia, where the religious misrule will take revenge for this and that, as is obviously inevitable for religious fanatics. Those from Yemen should also be mentioned, because they are also making a stink, and as far as I know, the war-addicted and hegemonic Americans are already behind them; but if I compare Netanyahu with Putin's actions, then the Russian, as a still halfway 'normal' Russian war leader, comes off much better than the obviously completely evil and deviant Israeli Netanyahu. Not to mention the fact that Turkey's Erdogan looks like a stupid, bold schoolboy with a vindictive attitude with his bombings against the PKK in Syria and Iraq, while Netanyahu is also at war in Syria, bombing Damascus and having his army of murderers shoot at and blow up cars in the streets. The guy can and may murder, destroy and do what he wants - like America, its president and army - with weapons etc., which and whatever else he receives from America and Germany or from the NeoNAZI rulers, as well as, as I have already said, from America and its approval for all war crimes. This, along with other aid, without any proper or even any intervention. Only half-heartedly do some media make themselves heard here and there, but nothing is done to put an end to the malicious and murderous activities of the mass murderer Netanyahu. And the fact that Jordan and Iraq simply accept that Netanyahu abuses their airspace in order to send missiles and airplanes through it to Persia and Iran respectively will not be so easily accepted in the end, I think.

Well, the clown and evil war fanatic Selensky in Ukraine, who is begging for weapons, money and NATO membership worldwide, is far behind Netanyahu, who is trying to mercilessly realize his genocidal mania through the Israeli military against Hamas in the Gaza Strip and Hezbollah in Lebanon in an absolutely mass-murderous and really completely irresponsible, ruthless, dehumanized and merciless way. In doing so, he has reignited the vicious anti-Semitism that has subsided somewhat since the last world war - just like the clown Selensky in Ukraine, who, as a Jew, reignited hatred against the Jewish people worldwide. The fact that idiots and other lunatics and partisans are helping him with arms supplies and money, etc., is just as stupid as the Swiss idiots, who are making a mockery of the tried and tested neutrality and making Switzerland vulnerable to attack with their insane actions and thoughtless behavior. This, for example, by idiotically adopting sanctions from the EU dictatorship and applying them against Russia, as well as postponing the delivery of material to the Swiss army in order to be able to deliver weapons to Selensky first, material that the Swiss army should actually receive. In my opinion, however, the Swiss army would only commit murder without hesitation if it were called upon to do so, because war is deliberate murder either way. But treasonous acts are carried out from the Federal Palace in Bern by people who sit in the Federal Palace as Federal Councillors, where they do not belong. The fact that such elements are elected to the government at all shows that the people who elect such treacherous subjects are no better off and have absolutely no knowledge of human nature, but in their stupidity only have a big mouth and shabbily and shamefully only exercise their power. This also applies to elements who irresponsibly want to stifle species diversity or biodiversity, even though this is vital for humans and all fauna and flora and is therefore so dependent on it that nothing natural can exist without it. How stupid and foolish, i.e. foolish and silly as well as not thinking, a person must be who wants to disadvantage or even stifle the extensive vital biodiversity for all life in order to build senseless and crazy highways and other nonsensical things. This, instead of doing something sensible to drastically reduce the all-destructive overpopulation, such as through sensible education in the sense that a worldwide and multi-year birth stop is to be followed, that humanity is to be 'reduced'. This to just 500,000,000 people, so that the planet and nature can recover and regenerate, the fauna can live again and move and live freely again without idiotic territorial restrictions, and the flora can flourish again all around. In addition to everything else, this will allow the atmosphere to detoxify and the climate to return to normal. But the fact that a Federal Councillor of all people opposes this and wants to have wolves, beavers and other animals and wildlife shot is effectively more than just idiotic, and the fact that such completely irresponsible elements are in the Federal Council at all is more than just regrettable and worrying. Just as treacherous elements can carry out their criminal activities from the Federal Palace without being called to account, neither can those who treacherously 'spar' with the EU dictatorship and treacherously sell Switzerland to it. This is what I have to say and what I see, namely things and behaviors as well as efforts that are completely directed against Switzerland, its peace and freedom as well as against Swiss neutrality.

Now, the fact that the Swiss government is also seriously violating the country's neutrality and making a mockery of it, for example by adopting sanctions from the EU dictatorship and applying them against Russia, is a bombshell. This, as well as other reckless violations of neutrality, including the senseless waste of millions of Swiss francs, as well as interference in the war in Ukraine, for example by planting mines in Ukrainian territory - precisely because of Switzerland's interference and financial expenditure.

This no longer has anything to do with neutrality, but effectively with destroying it through treason. Those in the Federal Council should think carefully about this, because this kind of action is contrary to neutrality, which prohibits it, because it is interference in foreign acts of war and has absolutely nothing to do with humanitarian aid. Such action is always a breach of neutrality and therefore interference in warfare and cannot be brushed aside with the lie of alleged humanitarian aid. Aid can only be justified if war refugees are taken in and offered protection or medical assistance. Any activity or aid etc. can and may only be carried out in a country at war, while maintaining neutrality, once the war has ended and humanitarian aid is then genuinely provided. Such acts of interference, however, as have recently been irresponsibly carried out by Switzerland and its government, are reprehensible and clearly nothing other than partisan and a betrayal of true neutrality and the country - the homeland. The whole thing is not only a violation of neutrality, but effectively turns it into a pig and thus also makes Switzerland vulnerable if it is acted against in any way. Switzerland has already been rejected by Russia and other states as a negotiating venue and partner for peace talks, but this apparently does not bother those culpable idiots and traitors to neutrality and those who do not think and have no conscience in the government - although traitors to their country in their lack of conscience, irresponsibility and inability to think are apparently unable to do so. This promotes exactly what I saw together with Sfath and then wrote the poem in 1950 that you photographed for me from Sfath's annals and brought to me on October 18, which I now want to insert here during our conversation.

The time of destruction comes in the third millennium In the third millennium, destruction comes over all earthly life, because the tormented blue planet will shake to its foundations, as mentioned in other predictions is completely clear and true, because man of the earth will be so ungrateful in his actions, that he goes overboard with his mass of people - and wickedly destroys everything, the planet, its nature and its fauna and flora so outrageously, and in such a way, with all his machinations, that much life will die or be endangered, and in a lasting way. Incompetent government elements are coming to light in Switzerland, whereby the country's neutrality is being abused and extinguished by the stupidity and incompetent and irresponsible lunatics, who truly do not think and are nothing more than killers of neutrality. Everything is caused by the confused madness of the people of this world, whose war cries are ringing loudly everywhere in the third millennium. Man of the earth, you provoke it to come, which is why it will happen in such a way that in the future all of the violent destruction will roll viciously over you. And it will be so because you will not turn to the truth, because you only ever think towards religion, lies and politics in blindness, and have only allowed yourself to be driven by them to greed and lust for power, so hatred, untruth, addiction and also lust for murder could take hold of you. Through religion and politics you have been very lousily exploited, have been deceived and have become the stupid bearer of worries. Earthman, you pass on all your responsibility to your god, true to all the old heresies of all delusional religious hoarding. But remember from now on, man of earth, man of the beautiful earthly world, when cries of death, evil and destruction ring out across the planet, you will bear the responsibility for everything completely alone, for you can never consult a 'dear God' for your mad actions. You alone are responsible for all evil happenings, because you will never be assisted by a god, an angel or a pope; they are only there to deceive you and exploit you in an evil and malicious way, to enslave your thoughts, to bring you madness and evil ruin. You yourself, Earthman of the blue planet in this solar system, are closest to yourself in knowledge and right doing, also lawful; therefore, always align yourself completely and entirely with the truth alone, otherwise much more harm and misery, hardship and torment will come upon you; nor can you keep much of the threatening negative away from you if you make an effort to act truly well and rightly, but you have to move away from religions and politics, otherwise your bones will bleach in the blazing heat of the sun. Soon, some things will arrive before the next millennium, but the rest will follow suit and affect the descendants.

Edi, 11.17 h, Monday, February 6, 1950

In addition to this poem from 1950, I wrote the following a few days ago, on October 20, which I would also like to read to you here during our conversation. It's not much, but I think I should say or write a few words, because the longer it goes on, the more it becomes necessary to say what is needed and what is true. As I see it, the people of the world are becoming more and more numb to what is happening around the world, as a result of which the ongoing wars in Ukraine and the Middle East are simply accepted with indifference and the warring scoundrels and all their murderous armies are still hailed like saints, especially if they still belong to certain religions and are fanatically devoted to them and these are played to the fore. This is what is happening in America's government, where, by the way, it will work like a miracle that the lesser evil of masculinity will be given the upper hand in the upcoming leadership elections to be decided in November, while the far worse evil of femininity will be put in its place, which would cause and trigger unforeseen catastrophes, as an observation of the future with Sfath revealed.

Quetzal From my grandfather's annals I know that the new presidency - as you said a few days ago - will not be 'the yellow of the egg' and under certain circumstances the whole life of the world will be threatened, and even by a state leadership, namely when the wrong thing is done by ...

Billy Yes, I know that, because with Sfath was ...

Quetzal That is also written, if you are aware of everything. Billy I am.

Quetzal Then there's nothing more to say.

Billy That will indeed be the case, as Sfath and I have seen. But listen to what I want to read to you here, namely about what I've written about the future, because I can't avoid saying what I've written here:

Freedom, peace and independent thinking instead of faith

Peace, freedom, not faith, but independent thinking - which currently sounds like a utopia in October 2024 and for a long time to come in the course of the third millennium - unfortunately sounds more than just negative at the moment, and it will probably remain so for a very long time to come. At least unless all those in positions of responsibility and governments on Earth, as well as their supporters and all people on Earth of both sexes, finally make a serious effort to learn understanding and reason, wisdom and modesty in order to become truly wise and peaceful people. This would, however, require that every human being finally begins to think independently and clearly without any religious or worldly delusions and is effectively able to do so, for this alone, as well as without any egoistic or other kind of preconditions, would allow them to fully and voluntarily integrate themselves into the instructions that are reasonably devised by wise people around the world and how these shape and release their valuable attitude. And the people who follow what is valuable would lead humanity on earth to true freedom and lasting peace, just as the evil and destructive machinations of overpopulation would cease. Machinations that are destroying, eradicating and destroying the entire earth planet as well as nature and its entire fauna and flora. Overpopulation is the greatest evil of all, because its machinations are destroying everything that is vital to all living things, from the lowest moss and blade of grass to the vine tree, from the smallest to the largest life form, the elephant, but especially the human being.

The planet earth, together with its entire creation, nature and its fauna and flora, should be respected, honored and appreciated by earthly man, so he should no longer listen to the idiots who are on the one hand bean-straw stupid and on the other hand completely without conscience and scrounge for increased births for offspring. Believers are being

'saints' for the sake of monetary gain to promote offspring, such as the pope, who has his Catholi-

The unrighteous part of the ruling class calls on people to 'create' more offspring so that they can rake in the money. This, like the unrighteous part of those in power who demand ever higher taxes and then squander them pointlessly. Such irresponsible elements of the ruling class - from which all righteous rulers are of course excluded - snorkel for more and more offspring in order to collect more taxes, as well as to gain enough cannon fodder for wars, when they thus unscrupulously bring death, manslaughter, misery, misery and destruction upon the world and humanity. And that part of the completely irresponsible rulers is also not afraid of lying, deceiving and partisan, completely and utterly irresponsibly supporting criminal leaders of foreign states and their shameful and inhumane war crimes, as well as committing treason against their own country, against which the entire people cannot even do anything, because they are simply denied the right to do so.

Such evil, idiotic and blasphemous demands, which promote overpopulation all the more excessively and rapidly and destroy everything of the planet, nature and its fauna and flora, even entail that correct instructions are prevented - which are also spread worldwide by the FIGU - which should be urgently thought through and followed, so that everything destructive and destructive and first and foremost overpopulation would be stopped and the planet, nature and its entire fauna and flora would be brought back into order. If this were to happen, then the Earth's climate, which has been adversely affected by mankind and has brought many evils, destruction and countless deaths and devastation and has turned evil, would be able to fulfill its usefulness. However, as it has been and continues to be partially impaired by the earthling, it has already reached the point where climate change and the resulting warmth and heat have rendered many small and large faunal life forms incapable of absorbing and neutralizing the emissions of CO₂ and other poisonous gases, with the result that the earth's atmosphere is becoming more and more poisoned. This has already spread not only to lower plants, but even to the tree forests, causing diseases to multiply and intensify among mankind, as pathogens from foreign lands invade, which in earlier times only appeared in foreign countries. This, just as people are becoming more and more stupid in their behavior and therefore more non-thinking.

Now, if the right thing were finally understood, done and implemented, true peace and freedom would emerge on planet Earth within a few decades. However, this would require that only righteous and honest rulers get into positions of responsibility, and not elementary gossip that is bean-straw stupid and only greedy for power, as - with a few exceptions - unfortunately is currently the case in practically every country on earth. This concerns elements that are in government and also - and I want to say this again - bean-straw stupid and completely incapable of thinking about the future, as a result of which they cannot prevent many evils from occurring and cannot be avoided. Healthy, responsible foresight, guided by reason and common sense, would allow us to recognize what could happen in the future before a disaster could even be announced and actually occur. But at the moment it is absolutely only a pipe dream that such governmental elements are not at the helm, because if everything is considered worldwide, then there are masses of governmental idiots at work, worldwide, as I have just said, against whom all the righteous of the governments have no and not the slightest chance of ordering and doing the right thing. Unfortunately, the righteous of the people will also be powerless against this in the future, because the majority of the population remains blind to reality and its truth and consequently howls along with the unrighteous of the governments.

Apart from the fact that unrighteous members of the ruling class are committing treason in a rather nasty way and are 'screwing' their own people and the security of their own state: Such useless elements are also the ones who, without consulting the people - and without allowing them to vote on the matter - are plundering taxpayers' money in order to provide partisan war aid to foreign states and supply them with deadly weapons and money etc.

All life on the planet, man, nature and the entire fauna and flora would flourish and be worth living again, and all annihilation, extinction and destruction through the machinations of overpopulation would be ended if the right action were taken. It would effectively have the effect of allowing the planet and nature as well as its fauna and flora to recover, regenerate and rebuild, and the rampant and rampant spread of various diseases would also be put in check. Everything would put an end to the murderous wars, all related murder, destruction and annihilation as well as the malicious extermination of fauna and flora, the destruction of nature and the planet and the poisoning of the atmosphere and the impairment of the climate. In addition to all this, man's intellect and reason would be stimulated in such a way that the overpopulation, which is destroying everything through its machinations, would be rigorously brought to a valuable, normal and planet-friendly level through a worldwide and controlled stop to births. But the Pope wants to prevent this just as much as idiotic rulers, because the 'saint in Rome' - like government idiots the populations - calls on his Catholics to produce more offspring - probably so that more money flows into the Vatican again, as the government idiots also tend towards more taxes and cannon fodder for wars. If the masses of humanity could finally get rid of the religious delusion of "go and multiply", everyone would realize that it is not false and miserable religious instructions that are to be followed, but rather independent thinking, a lively mind and clear reason that are what man, all life, nature, fauna and flora and the planet need.

Earth needs. And man would become clearly aware that it is not any faith, no God or angel etc., but only man alone and he himself and his independent, rational and reasonable, clear, true, genuine and free thinking, decisions and actions without any religious or worldly faith that can bring everything back into balance. In other words, as it has been since the beginning of creation, before man fell into his megalomania that he was ruler over all things and even life and death and even creation itself. Creation is - and I must explain this clearly and distinctly, for which the time has only just come - truly nothing other than pure nature throughout the universe, the whole of existence in general, the all-encompassing existence of everything tangible and also everything intangible. It is the natural energy and power of everything that exists, and this energy and power is predetermined in all life of all living things, i.e. - according to earthly knowledge in supposedly indivisible tiny quarks, bosons, protons, leptons and electrons, but this is truly not the conclusion of wisdom - in everything largest and tiniest that man on earth is not yet capable of exploring.

Creation is fundamentally the energy and power and thus the true existence of all things tangible and intangible, and as such Creation is not an entity God, Angel, Son of God, Lord, Elohim, Almighty, Jehovah, Yahweh, Comforter, Allah, World Ruler, El Roi, Savior, Adonai, Holy Spirit, Jesus, Abba resp. Father, Theos, Kyrios, Trinity, Eloah, Eternal or any other form of being capable of thinking, reasoning, feeling, sensing, deciding, punishing, judging, etc. Creation is pure animating energy and power of everything and everyone that is material and therefore tangible, as well as intangible, as well as energy and power of everything non-material immaterial and intangible, as well as energy, gravitation, information, etc.

Creation is pure WORKING, pure working energy and power, which provides everything and every living being with life energy and life force according to its genus or species, every self-propelling life form - man, animal, beast and other life forms of fauna and flora of all genera and species in general - such as every giant tree, every micro-small moss formation and curd, the planet, its rocks, water, rocks, mountains, the atmosphere, the climate and everything and everyone that exists. Creation animates everything and anything with life energy and power for as long as it is able to exist or live according to its genus or species. This applies from the giant tree down to the tiniest blade of grass and moss and curd, etc. In the pure EFFECT of creation, in its existence of comprehensive nature in the entire universe, no thought finds an origin, but only an evolutionary, natural and inaudible and absolutely neutral EFFECT in every way. So there is no good or bad, no good or evil, because creation as nature and the all-encompassing existence of everything and everyone in the entire universe is eternal and, so to speak, everlasting and absolutely neutral and balanced. And if negative, bad, degenerate and evil etc. arise, then such negative values cannot arise through creation, but only through the ways of thinking, feeling, feeling, feeling, instincts and various other impulses and actions etc. of life forms. This is the case with humans, animals and creatures and with life forms of all genera and species in general. And it is precisely with regard to these that I have made the observation that the majority of people on earth do not know the difference between genus and species, just as in writings and the media there is only talk of SPECIES, although the animals referred to are not species, animals, animals or self-propelled life forms and plants are basically effective genera and not simply species, as is erroneously claimed, because even the fair sciences - which are held in such high esteem by earthlings, but are truly not wisdom itself - are not so clever that they would teach earthly mankind what is right. Namely, that gender is not simply gender.

On Earth, scientists and earthlings in general are obviously unaware of the reality and its truth, e.g. that animals are mammals without exception, alongside which there are also animals and millions of species of self-propelled life forms, as well as millions of species of plants.

Obviously, due to stupidity or ignorance, people on earth do not know the difference between genus and species, or the difference has never been explained to them. The only correct thing would be - as is self-evident among the Plejaren and taught from childhood, and as was taught to me by Sfath - that the entire fauna and flora are not simply to be described and named as SPECIES, as is the case in the very primitive 'knowledge' and linguistic usage of the Earth people. Sfath's, as well as the Plejaren's overall, explanatory doctrine was that the earthly relationships of definitions and descriptions as well as names etc. of things, things given, existing, existing and realities etc. are extremely primitive and absolutely inadequate. This is particularly the case with regard to fauna and flora, which have always been limited to animals and plants. According to Sfath and the Plejaren, however, fauna should be named according to what it really and truly embodies, namely animals, creatures and self-moving life forms that are to be named by their names, such as snake, beetle, mosquito, fish, bird, chicken or lizard etc. In the case of flora, these are plants, such as trees, grass, flowers, algae, shrubs, etc. But in this respect, the earthly sciences and their practitioners are obviously not educated enough to understand this and would therefore call everything by its species form, according to its gender and species. As for the fact that even 'fair' science apparently does not know that all forms of life are to be specifically determined according to their sex and species, they apparently do not even have a clue. Nor do they know that, in terms of gender, the 3 genera differences are not 'spoons' or 'spoons'.

masculine gender, as the masculine gender, in short: masculine, as well as not 'fork' or feminine gender, as the feminine gender, in short: feminine, as well as not the neutral gender, 'knife', the neuter gender, in short: neuter. In the sense of gender and kind, therefore, it is not the feminine gender (feminine), the woman, the jug, the fork, the flower; or the masculine gender (masculine), the man, the yard, the moon - or neuter gender (neuter) that is being addressed, because according to the plejaric explanation, SEXUAL SEX does not correctly refer to the characteristic of SEXUAL SEX, but rather, according to earthly linguistic usage, to the SEX. This would be - according to Plejaric teaching - the actual term and the effectively correct designation for the term 'sex', which is wrongly used by earthly man, because this word means and says exactly what it effectively is, namely that a certain species is, for example, the woman, i.e. female, but another species is the man, i.e. male. There is also the genus hermaphrodite, living beings - including humans - that are both male and female in terms of their sexual characteristics and traits.

Life forms, thus also humans, if they do not correspond to a species, i.e. crosses of mutually alien main sexual forms, but mutually homologous main sexual forms, are absolutely always 'homologous', which means that an extension or an offspring strikes or forms itself in the same direction from which it emerges or is born. Something that is absolutely not the case when the main sexual form is mated by another and foreign main sexual form, consequently this then corresponds to another form that is created and born, namely a species that inevitably only partially corresponds to the main sexual form that is created by crossing.

It is therefore clearly understood that the offspring are formed and shaped according to the main female sex as a result of mating by a main male sex. If, however, cross-mating takes place, namely by a 2nd main sex or a foreign main sex, then a new life form or an ab-species is formed from this, which emerges or is born as an independent species. These are called species by the pleiars in contrast to the main sex, while earth humans call such mixed beings hybrids, which is a completely wrong and misleading name, because hybrid does not mean that it is a mixed being of 2 fundamentally different and therefore alien main sexes, because the earthly term hybrid has always meant 'arrogance', 'presumption', 'arrogance' and has nothing to do with gender diversity and species diversity. This is also proven by the primitiveness of earthly languages, through which false word values are used that do not say what is really meant. Species that arise as a result of cross-breeding, i.e. through different main sexes that are foreign to each other, give rise to life forms that are called species because they are composed of different main sexes and are therefore of two different main sex origins and are therefore mixed and therefore cross-bred. Such species are - depending on the case - infertile or partly fertile, so that not all species, but only some of them, are 'capable of mating', whereby it is even less given that species capable of reproduction develop.

Growths, outgrowths and diseases of all kinds etc. in nature, in plants of fauna and flora and thus also in humans, do not arise through the WORK of creation, but through circumstances that occur, which normally result from some kind of development of environmental influences. Such environmental influences are physical and completely naturally developing chemical or biological factors that affect and infest completely natural systems and have an impact on organic conditions, thus exerting a harmful environmental influence. With humans and the entire fauna - as with the all-encompassing flora - there is the possibility that, for example, a proliferation or disease will spread, that spores and germs may spread through the wind, or that such germs may spread contagiously and even trigger an epidemic or pandemic. However, this does not happen through the fault of creation, but through the circumstances of life, its conditions, the carelessness of man and the fauna and flora, which have their own forms of language and means of communication, contrary to man's open knowledge. This, as they are constantly changing in the course of time, changing their physical appearance and their form of communication, as will happen with man, who will change anatomically in the course of the next 200 years, so that a discrepancy to today's appearance - especially facially - will occur through a certain change.

People's views and knowledge will also change dramatically, which today are still characterized by delusional belief in religions and sectarianism, leading to a lack of education and knowledge and a tendency for the majority of humanity to slowly but surely become stupid. This also means that countless people greedily keep themselves 'afloat' with war, degeneracy, crime and criminality, power, violence, wealth and all kinds of deviant airs and graces etc. and slowly but surely wither away. The religions have done their work and continue to do so, because the believers cling to the erroneous belief that a god gives and controls everything, and they think that this imaginary god is eternal, in the sense that he is timeless. This is in contrast to today's more real philosophy of the somewhat more reasonable philosophers, who are of the prevailing opinion that God is temporal, i.e. only for a certain period of faith of the delusional believers. The believers in God, however, believe that God is of an eternal 'nature' and even more eternal than just eternal and completely timeless. They believe completely thoughtlessly that God never came into being, but has always been and will never cease to exist, but it truly only exists within the time of the delusional thinkers who have no self-respect whatsoever and defer respect to their imaginary god.

If we now consider Christianity, then it is the second oldest of the 3 existing main religions and has been misleading countless earthlings for just over 2000 years and is currently probably the most widespread religion on earth. It is based on Judaism, because Jmmanuel, who is wrongly called Jesus, was a Jew by birth, but he renounced this religion and therefore fell out of favor as a result of spreading the teachings. But there is also the youngest of the 3 monotheistic religions, namely Islam, which is based on and builds on the Christianity and Judaism that emerged and came into being around 600 after Jmmanuel, starting from a completely falsified false doctrine, which Jmmanuel never brought and never taught and which is truthfully nothing more than a continuation and also a falsification of the Christianity that emerged and was falsified.

In Islam, God is called Allah, and if all the names for God mentioned in the 'Holy Koran' are added together, the result is a number that exceeds 100. Various lists show 99 names of this kind, some of which differ greatly from one another. However, according to the Islamic view, the 100th name of God is unpronounceable and unknown to mankind, whereby many believers in Islam do not even know anything about this fact.

If we now look at the religions of India as a whole, it can be said that they do not have a founder, as is the case with Christianity, allegedly through the imaginary Jesus Christ, and with Islam through Mohammed ibn Abd Allah. However, there are around 330 million gods and goddesses, as well as countless seers and saints, whereby the dense network of religious and philosophical currents has developed over the past 4000 years or so.

The believers of Indian religions - mainly Hinduism - believe that there is one main god, Brahman, and that the other gods - depending on the case - have these and those different aspects of the main god Brahman. Various Hindu believers assume that many of the other gods are completely independent of the main god Brahman. Most Hindu gods are depicted figuratively or as sculptures, with many having multiple heads and hands, signifying that these gods would have extreme power and abilities.

What is also interesting to know is that the root of the word 'god' can be found in the Germanic area, in the root word 'guda', which was used by the Germanic tribes for female and male deities.

Christian believers crazily assume that God is Father, Son and Holy Spirit at the same time, which they call the Trinity in their delusion. They also need the term 'Father', by which they believingly mean a completely imaginary 'Creator of all living beings and things'.

Christians believe that God has no parents, at least not in the literal sense. God, they believe, is eternal and for this reason alone cannot have parents or any ancestors.

God, Christians believe, was therefore not created by a person, nor by any thing or other, for he is said to have always been, even without having created himself. However, he - but not man - is said to have created 'time', and since man on earth lives in the dimension of time, understanding and reason demand that all things that exist have a beginning and an end. However, Christian believers believe that this does not apply to God, because he lives outside of space and time and therefore outside of any dimension. But this begs the question: how can something exist if there is no dimension?

In the beginning, it is claimed, God is said to have created heaven and earth - and hell? - and before that there was supposed to have been 'confusion and chaos and darkness'. At any rate, this is how it is famously written in the Christian book of Genesis in the Old Testament.

Even then, thousands of years ago, people crazily thought that God was primeval and eternal, in the sense that he himself was timeless or that his existence was timeless. Today, however, certain people think somewhat more reasonably, but still delusionally, that God is temporal and thus transient with time. His eternal nature is therefore considered to be non-eternal and therefore timeless, whereby the timeless can end in the human sense and can find a new beginning again.

Christians, Jews and believers in Islam, as monotheists, assume that God has no age and has always been God, without having been created in any way or having created himself. The 'Holy Scriptures' of all religions claim that God exists as Creator from eternity to eternity, and that God has no beginning and no end. In the beginning there was only chaos, and the first God was rather just a 'spirit' who gave his daughter 'Gaia' the earth and her son Uranos the sky, and that they had many children, including the Titans, the first real gods. The most important Titans were Kronos and Rheia, who also had many children. Finally, there is Buddhism, a religion that has around 200 to 500 million followers worldwide - although this is not known - and is therefore the 4th largest religion. The current spread of the false doctrine of rebirth can basically be traced back to this religion, although it has been referred to as 're-existence' or 'becoming again' or 'renewed existence' since time immemorial. In the Buddhist context, the term is taken from Indian philosophy and was in use long before the birth of Siddharta Gautama Buddha, the founder of Buddhism. The term 'rebirth' was already known and used in the Vedic language. Buddha simply adopted it and adapted it to his own ideas and insights. However, it should be clearly explained here - something that had to be concealed until now due to necessity, because the time did not yet permit enlightenment and this is only now becoming the case - that Buddha was halfway to

The first step in the right line of understanding was that there is no new birth and existence after a person's death, but that the life energy of creation that animates him gives life to a new consciousness and thus a completely new personality.

Buddha, however, understood 'rebirth' very well, namely that a person is not reborn as such and the same person again after ex-carnation or death, so he by no means misunderstood 'rebirth' to mean that a person's 'soul' should be reborn, as was understood in other religious traditions and is still misunderstood today by believers in religions or believers in rebirth with regard to rebirth or reincarnation - which actually basically means simply becoming flesh again or reincarnation. Buddha understood rebirth or reincarnation to mean a new emergence of a new consciousness or a new personality, a new person, i.e. a new process of an absolutely new existence. However, as he was never able to express this correctly in language due to his weak linguistic formation and knowledge of the language and was therefore not educated enough in this respect and was therefore not able to explain in detail what would actually have been necessary to explain, he used the wrong term 'rebirth'. Furthermore, in Buddha's time, the terms that are commonplace today did not yet exist, which have emerged very well as explanations as a result of the comprehensive knowledge and language development that has progressed up to the present day. Other 'Buddhist teachings', which misinterpret and mislead rebirth after rebirth, unfortunately also exist, because even in Buddhism bad falsifications of the teaching have arisen, as is also the case in all other religions. The teaching that Buddha brought was falsified in the same way as the teachings of Immanuel and Mohammed, resulting in a confusion that, as in Christianity and Islam, has given rise to various sects and beliefs that no longer contain anything of the reality and truth of the original teaching.

Believers in Buddhism worship Buddha as the enlightened one, but not as God, although there are various gods in certain branches of Buddhism, but they do not play a major role in the beliefs of Buddhists and actually have nothing to do with Buddha's teachings. Nonetheless, Buddhism is a religion that contains very serious falsifications throughout, just as a very large number of idiotic and absolutely unforgivable belief factors have been fabricated from it.

Reality and the irrefutable truth in it says that rules must be observed and adhered to in order to make a person a true human being. And there are so many of them that it would be possible to write a whole large work about them. As an example, let us just mention 14 important points, of which there are thousands, which are also very valuable in terms of becoming a true human being, but which in no way have anything to do with religious aspirations and the like.

1. No living beings should be killed or harmed, which was originally taught thousands of years ago that neither humans, animals, creatures and other self-moving creatures nor plants should be harmed. According to clear understanding, this can be understood to mean that neither humans nor fauna and flora should be harmed or killed, and that neither wars nor terror, nor revenge, retribution and murder etc. should be carried out.
2. Nothing should be taken that has been stolen or otherwise taken or acquired unlawfully, and therefore should not be stolen.
3. Man can exercise understanding and reason, he should not do anything wrong, nor engage in sexually unhealthy relationships, nor commit adultery, nor practice fornication and pedophilia.
4. Man does not seek his neighbor's wife, husband or property, nor his life or well-being, nor does he diminish his neighbor's honor and dignity, nor does he deny his neighbor's righteousness or place insurmountable obstacles in his way.
5. Man should exercise his senses in the right way, so he should think for himself and not believe, do what is right and be honest.
6. Man should not lie and not speak unwholesomely, and he should not lie, but always tell the truth, never bear false witness, just as he should never insult his neighbor and thus not speak evil and blasphemously about his fellow man, etc.
7. Man develops, becomes pure and shapes his inner world if he does what is right and therefore does not need to fear anyone.
8. Man shall honor and protect his mother, his father and all people, as well as nature and all living beings of every kind and species, to the best of his ability and capacity.
9. Man cultivates his thoughts and feelings and shapes his inner being and becomes a true man; but for this he learns and becomes knowledgeable and wise.
10. Man attains purity and strives for perfection, for which he learns to handle all his impulses correctly, and he learns everything correctly in every respect and becomes wise and compassionate.

11. People should always be attentive to peace, freedom, charity, kindness, helpfulness, warm-heartedness and affection.
12. People should be attentive at all times, but never succumb to indifference.
13. Man never does injustice, revenge and retaliation in equal measure when injustice is done to him.
14. Man should not be a slave to faith, but a knower and wiser of reality and truth.

If the center 'Teaching of Truth, Teaching of Creation Energy, Teaching of Life' is considered and taught, then this is aimed at the fact that man lives, leads and aligns his life according to reality and its truth through his learning and knowledge. He can achieve this with the help of meditation, which is important and meaningful to him, if he can organize and cultivate his thoughts in peace and quiet through meditation, far from any belief and dependence, as well as free from any external influences and free from any disturbing impulses.

Through meditation, everyone can 'go into themselves' and find peace, as well as find and attain true knowledge of reality and truth. This is also the way and value of mutual respect among all people in general, as well as being completely free from intoxicating substances such as alcohol and drugs etc. Through true meditation - if a person really makes an effort to do so and organizes his thinking and thus his thoughts in a restful way - the result is that women and men are placed in equal value and without distinction. Through meditation, man illuminates himself and is his own light within himself, as well as for his knowledge, wisdom and lifelong personal evolution.

Humans - and no other entity - are conscientiously responsible for honestly repairing the damage done to the planet and its nature/creation and making life worth living again for humans, the planet, species diversity and thus also the whole of nature and its fauna and flora. This will only happen very slowly if the necessary steps are finally taken before it is too late, which can be very quickly if the right action is not taken. All people on earth should be aware of this, especially those who are in leading positions in governments and who may get hold of these lines and read them with an open mind and think about them intensively in order to make everything clear to themselves. Then, when this is done, all people who are in a position to do so should for once really seriously think up something useful and make truly valuable decisions, which are then effectively put into practice through appropriate action.

Billy, 9.38 h, October 20, 2024

Quetzal What you have written here is very good, and it is also very enlightening. I am also referring to everything that Bernadette has produced together with Methuselah, because it is really very enlightening and says what effectively corresponds to reality and truth. Since Methuselah had the truth written down in this way by Bernadette, I do not understand that ...

Billy Unfortunately, that's the way it is, and I can't change it, because ...

Quetzal That's understandable too, and it's really not up to you, but to them, because ...

Billy I'm aware of that, but I don't think it's on my side ... Besides, I was sued after 30 years because ...

Quetzal I know that, because Arlion dealt with it, and I know from him that 14 other people, men and women, had the same experiences, which Arlion and his crew were able to neutralize after several years.

Billy Yes, that's right, but unfortunately ... didn't come here again from Germany.

Quetzal Unfortunately, that was the case, but he knew the truth about your connection with us, which he also recorded in writing and sent to you via his friend....

Billy That's the case - yes.

Quetzal Some of the things you told me during our conversations, that you were there with my grandfather in times gone by, like at Lake Titicaca more than 3000 years ago, then in the Far East, where the art island of Seranok ...

Billy But I can't write that down when I recall our conversation, I have to dot the i's because I promised Sfath back then when we were 'rummaging through the past' that I would keep quiet about what really happened.

Quetzal Then this is what I mentioned regarding Methuselah. Bermunda photographed it and we presented it to the committee, which judged it to be very valuable, but said that a few things should be added, namely ...

Billy We can do that right away, but I would like to make a note that this is an annotation. I received the whole thing from Bernadette on a stick and have transferred it to my computer. Then we can ...

Quetzal ... That was done quickly, but I think you'll only add the many pages at the end of our conversation when you call it up and write it down, because there would be far too much of a break in the conversation while reading.

Billy Of course, I can do that, but then I'll only put the whole thing in after Bernadette's 'Sprinkles'.

Quetzal? What is that? - 'Sprinkles', I've already read that, but I don't understand the meaning?

Billy Sprinkles - well, this is a term that actually refers to a skin stain or a splash of paint on a piece of clothing and is used in a slightly different way in various languages, but it is also used for 'Sommerflecken', as well as for excerpts from a document or for short explanations in response to questions.

Quetzal I was not aware of that. - Thanks for the explanation.

Billy You're welcome, but you don't need to thank me for that, because it's clear and obvious that something will be explained if necessary.

Quetzal I disagree with you. But let me read this ... Amazing - wait, I want to see what else is written ... Really very amazing - - These explanations, they are so precise and really explanatory. Bernadette has effectively learned so much that she could really be envied. There are not just a few traces of teaching in what she has written here, but the whole thing is comprehensively and logically thought through.

Billy It is truly remarkable, and I am very glad that Bernadette has taken on the valuable work of answering questions in this regard and is doing it more than satisfactorily. Unfortunately, however, there is no one who I could assume would be able to continue this valuable work when Bernadette has gone her last way.

Quetzal This really will be a problem that will not be easy to solve.

Billy Yes, that will be the case.

Quetzal Yes, but something else: you recently mentioned that there are broadcasts about unidentified flying objects on German television stations in the early hours of the morning. I was interested in this and found various stations that actually broadcast such programs, even during the day. These broadcasts are not very informative and are usually based on assumptions and thus conjectures, which really cannot be described as very informative because no real facts are given, because the people discussing them are obviously not aware of them. However, as we have established on various occasions - which you are aware of - such facts are effectively given, but they are kept under lock and key and secret, such as ..., which should not be discussed, as you ...

Billy Of course, and I stick to that. Besides, I don't deal with the UFOs I'm often asked about, because on the one hand I'm not interested in them, and on the other hand I'm not interested in what they do, because they don't relate to you Plejaren in any way. And what they look like - big and small - is not my business to describe, nor what they want and their interests and where they are stationed etc. etc. I'm not interested in all that, because what I already know from Sfath and from you is quite enough for me, and that includes the following ... But I don't care about that because, firstly, I have as little and nothing to do with it as you Plejaren do, and that's why I don't think I should talk about it or concern myself with it.

Quetzal That is also correct. But now, dear friend, I have to do my duty and leave. If there is nothing more important to do ...

Billy At least not today,

Quetzal Goodbye then, Eduard. It will happen again soon, and I will be here again. Farewell, dear friend.

Billy So be it to you, Quetzal - goodbye.

Unfortunately, some questions take longer in my mail folder before I can work through them. This may be because I need a 'lesson in creation energy theory' from Billy to answer them, but I only ask him for this when he has time and is in good health to answer my questions, or it may also be because I simply don't have the time or - frankly - sometimes just don't feel like dealing with complicated and overlong emails. For the following two sprinkles, however, I really did need Billy's tuition to help me think, so to speak:

Question: I have a question regarding Billy's explanation (in contact report 886) about natural sexual orientations. Specifically, I stumbled across zoophilia (bestiality) as a natural sexual orientation. In contrast, in the book of Genesis, from page 200, verses 10, 15, 16 and 19, zoophilia (sodomy) is described as behavior contrary to nature. How does this contradiction come about?

Answer: Most readers have probably stumbled across zoophilia and certainly most have misunderstood it. Of course, this should not be an invitation to try it out, but the naturalness finds its justification in a completely different way than assumed. I am copying Billy's explanation from the 887th contact into my answer below, in which he explains what is meant by 'naturalness':

"Well, there are only a few people who think about what is being said. For example, I was asked by telephone for a more detailed interpretation of what I recently said and explained regarding sexual practices. This in the sense that such things are natural to every form of life. It is obviously necessary for me to come back to this topic and explain that in every case naturalness - if I now start from man alone, although it concerns all living beings, including fauna and flora - is always and exclusively based on the fact that man himself conceives, determines, exercises and thus does this, etc. So if a person displays or exercises a certain way of behaving, acting, speaking or mannerism, then he creates the corresponding appearance, demeanor, behavior, his actions or manner of acting, his demeanor, his behavior and thus his actions and actions themselves, all as his habitus, his basic attitude, dictates. And man forms this habitus himself in every respect, which means that it happens completely naturally when man, since he has a free will and uses it voluntarily, forms his habitus in a completely natural way and allows himself to inherit or inherits it or anchors it in himself. In a completely natural way, namely through his free will, man thus allows his basic attitude to develop within himself, which he 'inherits' and 'gives birth to' through his speech or actions or by practicing his basic attitude. Thus, the appearance or manners and actions of a person form the totality of his good or bad preferences, habits, the type of social behavior, as well as the forms of good, bad or degenerate. All forms, however, are naturally created according to free will, although the origin can be different, so that it can be based on a wrong form of education, imitation, indoctrination, emotional arousal in false teaching or in lustful degeneration. Thus all and every one of man's modes of behavior, his entire habitus, is naturally formed, and naturally so, because all and everything is created and formed according to free will, in the positive as well as in the negative, in the good as well as in the bad, in the degenerate as well as in the virtuous; thus in human understanding also the normal and the abnormal, as these exist in many forms."

Of course, this does not exclude what is written in 'Genesis', but explains that the path to unnatural behavior is quite natural.

are not only secondary, but simply not relevant. Moreover, they concern completely different evolutionary processes than those of humans. We humans have nothing to do with these evolutionary processes and we will never have anything to do with them, because our individual vibrations and powers will one day, when we have completed our evolution as humans, continue to develop and infinitely intensify on completely different levels without personality and as an unrecognizable part of immense energies.

For us humans, only the creation energy teaching and the human values and virtues it teaches are authoritative and important, whereby the main focus is on daily and personal implementation, which means evolution for us! This is the only thing we should concern ourselves with in depth, namely with ourselves and who we are, what we want, how we act and behave, how we approach our environment and other people and how we respond to them, understand them, are helpful to them and allow them to share in our knowledge and insights.

But back to the petal level: This arises together with every first-created universe of creation and is a part of it for as long as it exists and remains so through all 10^{49} stages of development. If a creation reaches its highest form, then the petal level also reaches its highest form together with it and, after passing through the 10^{49} forms, integrates into the Absolute Absolute, after which the development progresses to the SEIN Absolute, which in turn expands infinitely.

In the emails that are sent to me, questions are repeatedly asked about faith, whereby it is obviously difficult for some questioners to understand what faith actually is and how it manifests itself or in what form faith expresses itself and in what relationships it occurs or can occur. Such questions also contain the assumption that there is a kind of 'knowledge of faith', which is simply impossible because faith and knowledge are absolutely mutually exclusive.

Question:

The connection between belief and knowledge is where I stumble. The basic problem is that belief cannot be completely eliminated, but must be transformed step by step. So you see, it is being done, but it cannot be completed at a certain end point. A beautiful Sisyphean task.

Answer:

To make a long story short: There is no connection or point of contact between faith and knowledge! Belief cannot be transformed into knowledge either, because it is always and without exception indeterminate and, so to speak, 'without solid ground underfoot'. Belief is always an assumption, even if it is based on supposed knowledge that can never be verified or proven. Belief is always stagnation and immobility in thinking, because it blocks all inner freedom and suspends one's own free thinking, making it absolutely impossible for what is believed to ever become a certainty due to the impossibility of finding something believed in reality. Belief cannot be eliminated because it paralyzes free thinking and logic through the absolute negation of truth, which is replaced and virtually eliminated by illusions, assumptions, fantasies and assertions.

Knowledge, on the other hand, is the result of an absolute experience and an insight that is based on pure, provable facts, deeds and reality, i.e. on truth. In contrast to belief, this stimulates our thinking and creativity as well as objective cognition and allows us to recognize and comprehend the truth or facts, which results in experience. This in turn leads to an unshakeable certainty, to an inner IT IS SO, which cannot be refuted or overridden by anything, precisely because it is rooted in the truth. Truth is always and in every case provable and comprehensible and always logical without exception. The foundation of knowledge and truth is solely the provable, comprehensible and logical reality, the facts that we have before our eyes and that take root within us and free us from any uncertainty, eliminate our useless fears and reduce any belief to absurdity.

Belief cannot be transformed, that is an absolute impossibility, because people can only free themselves from it by rigorously turning to the facts and ignoring any remnants of belief within themselves and only aligning themselves with reality, the facts and their logical insights and experiences and allowing them to come to the fore in their thinking. In this way, people gradually free themselves from belief without explicitly dealing with it and without exposing themselves to the danger of falling prey to new or simply different beliefs. Nothing else than what a person can logically comprehend and nothing else than what has proven to be right and true or a fact and reality in his life should be given space in his thinking and he should consistently concentrate on it. Comparisons between truth and faith are simply impossible and lead to useless and unrealistic conclusions.

This is because belief can creep uncontrollably into thinking in this way and paralyze it, which cannot be the purpose of the whole thing, because only truth, reality, facts and reality are able to liberate thinking, whereby all belief fades and automatically dissolves into nothingness.

Supplementary question:

Let's take a scientist who is trying to find a cure for a particular cancer. This person is aware of his/her limitations and uses experiments to get to the bottom of the problem. Of course, he/she uses a hypothesis and experiments to answer the question, but this is just a process to arrive at a solution. Now, could you elaborate on the example above? Is this person using a belief by hypothesizing and finding a solution that way? Or is this person aware of their limitations and has to start somewhere.

Answer:

To take up the example, I assume that a scientist who wants to develop a new cancer drug already has in-depth knowledge of the type of cancer and how it works in the body, which he has acquired over the course of his previous work on this disease. He has therefore made certain observations which he has memorized and which prompt him to think further step by step and to make new or extended considerations as to how this type of cancer can be brought under control. This means that he thinks about how and in what way the cancer works in the body and causes damage to it. Based on his previous experience and his further considerations, the scientist develops ideas on how he can influence the way the cancer works and prevent it from spreading, or how he could make the cancer retreat and disappear, which would be the equivalent of a cure.

He will try out these ideas with an open mind and, based on his observations and new findings, will repeatedly adapt or discard them and make new attempts. He will carry out the whole procedure until he comes to an accurate realization, which is then inevitably followed by the experience that he has found a good way through his experiments, but this does not mean that he has already reached the goal, because even a

A 'stopover' can already be a success and a confirmation that the chosen path could be promising.

If the scientist were to start from a firm conviction as the basis for his research, then he would never be able to achieve his goal, because a conviction always corresponds to a belief and a compulsion, and these restrict his free thinking or make it impossible, because he would be fixated on achieving the goal in a certain way due to his conviction, which is why he could no longer think and research with an open mind.

A conviction always and without exception corresponds to a fixed idea and a self-imposed or indoctrinated prejudice, or a fixed assumption and opinion that something must conform to a certain form or manner or a fixed concept. Basically, however, a conviction is definitely nothing more than a rigid, compulsive belief that cannot allow any deviation from the conviction and that prevents and even makes free, truthful and fact-based thinking impossible, because all observations, results, findings and evidence that are gained from failures and could lead further are disregarded, negated and simply cast aside or ignored and considered worthless because they do not correspond to the preconceived opinion or conviction.

Other people's thoughts and their consequences are just as much a part of the questions that reach me by email as the right way to behave in dubious situations. As some of the questions are asked in longer emails, which in turn could allow conclusions to be drawn about the person asking the question, I take the liberty of shortening the content of the emails to the essentials and formulating the questions in such a way that the anonymity of the person asking the question is preserved and trustworthiness is maintained. The following two examples illustrate this:

Question:

I noticed that a very important topic was not dealt with in Billy's books. It is about foreign thoughts in meditation and in daily life.

An unparalleled danger relates to extraneous thoughts that can last all day and feel as if you are flying. They come and go, sometimes strong, sometimes weak, and distract you from your own actions. They are practically always there if you let them break through and don't try to keep them under control. When

If they are given free rein, this can lead to dementia, depending on the type and strength of thoughts. I have had this experience in my own family, some of whose relatives have developed severe dementia, while others have successfully fought off dementia, but I also fear that dementia is hereditary and that this tendency has been passed on to me.

I try to be attentive throughout the day and this has a positive effect on my evening meditation. What I have written is based on my own experience, and I ask you to write something about it, because my findings could be wrong.

Answer:

In your e-mail you address the subject of foreign thoughts, which is dealt with in the books 'Introduction to Meditation' as well as in 'Meditation from a Clear View' and in the Teaching Letters 44 and 45 as well as in the Special Teaching Letters 29 (XXIX) and 36

(XXXVI) is treated in detail. In these writings it is clearly explained that extraneous thoughts are thoughts that creep uncontrollably into thinking, distract us from the actual subject of thought and tempt us to give in to them and thus allow ourselves to be torn away from our concentration. Of course, this does not only apply to meditation, but to all activities that require our undivided attention, as extraneous thoughts also creep in and cause people to turn away from what they want or should be concentrating on. In principle, extraneous thoughts are thoughts that do not belong to the topic that the person is currently thinking about, which leads to moments of inattention that can have devastating consequences in the worst case if they cannot be brought under control. This control can be learned through meditation, among other things, which helps people to sharpen their attention and slowly learn a consistent attitude towards extraneous thoughts by simply pushing them aside and ignoring them. Over time, these extraneous thoughts slowly subside and flatten out due to the learned inner attitude and way of reacting, which on the one hand promotes attention and at the same time facilitates concentration.

People who do not learn to control their thoughts run the risk of becoming victims of their own carelessness towards their thinking. In other words, they become lazy and erratic in their thinking, easily distracted, inattentive, believing, and follow illusory thoughts, as a result of which their thinking atrophies and they eventually slowly but surely become stupid, which can ultimately lead to dementia, among other things. Dementia is in no way genetic, as genetic influences only exist in relation to physical conditions or circumstances, such as physical ailments. However, dementia can not only be caused by a lack of or failure to take care of one's own thoughts, but also by external influences, such as blows to the head, a stroke or the late effects of unconsciousness, etc., as well as, for example, high blood pressure and other physical causes that damage microvessels in the brain.

Thinking is solely subject to the initiative of the person and is learned or acquired through contemplation, observation, education, imitation, etc., through which thinking is stimulated, after which the person must then learn to steer it into the right channels of reason and understanding and to distinguish attentively between right and wrong, reasonable and unreasonable, clear and diffuse, which results in a mental self-control that is developed and expanded purely individually according to the character and personality of the person. Learning to think correctly, factually, reasonably and intelligibly is a long and often arduous process, especially when senseless and meaningless distractions and pleasures are given priority and are not carefully kept under control. Indifference to one's own thinking can have devastating consequences, because the damage occurs quickly and eventually becomes irreversible, as the power to think is lost, just as muscle strength dwindles when a person does not use it. The only way to counteract the atrophy of thinking is through attention, factual thinking, meditation, concentration and occupation with meaningful and beneficial thought content, and this is a lifelong task that is sometimes easier and sometimes more difficult to master.

Question:

Recently, I was the victim of latent sexual harassment. The attacker came on to me with explicit 'offers', even though he knows that I am happily married and have a family. The assault shook me all the more because I had already been subjected to such attacks in my early years and the recent derailment took place in front of witnesses at the center. Some of the witnesses expressed sympathy, others wanted to 'remain neutral' but felt that the whole thing was based on a misunderstanding, while still others insinuated that the account of my actual traumatic experience amounted to gossip and slander and that I should keep my mouth shut. How should I have behaved, and wouldn't it be best to make your letter, in which the attacker was reprimanded and called to order, public?

Answer:

To get straight to the point: Billy and I are of the opinion that the following quote from him in contact report 169 is absolutely correct:

"It really makes you cry; people on earth think that they can achieve their goals through hypocrisy, stubbornness, selfishness, etc. I have had a completely different experience. I have had completely different experiences. Sfath once explained to me that you don't make any progress or gain any self-knowledge if you blaspheme against your fellow human beings, look for their faults and tell others off. He taught me that if you want to learn something, you have to keep your mouth shut, that you only register the mistakes of others when they catch your eye, but that you should never talk about them. You can only observe, keep your mouth shut, register and think about it thoroughly. The point of this reflection, however, is that you only use the fault you see in your fellow human being as an opportunity to look within yourself to see whether the same fault is not also present in yourself and can therefore be recognized and rectified. However, anyone who talks about the mistakes of others, and consequently also belittles and betrays others, never learns anything. On the contrary, a person who only sees the mistakes of others and talks about them to third parties or belittles them is never capable of thinking truthfully and recognizing their own mistakes. Such a person also always tries to reshape his fellow human being into his own template by harassing him, blackmailing him, arguing with him, hectoring him behind his back and doing everything else that is evil. But all this also has an effect on the study of truthful teachings, such as the spiritual teachings (creation energy teachings) etc., because a person with this way of life is then simply incapable of concentrating on a truly spiritual (conscious) study. He lacks the strength to do so, which he wastes by focusing his attention on his neighbor's mistakes, as a result of which he lacks all strength and progress for self-knowledge and his own evolution. The forces that would be necessary for self-study, spiritual study and self-knowledge, etc., are eaten up by the wrong behavior that consists of smiling at others, insulting others, wrongly observing others and looking for faults in others. Instead of sweeping up the dirt in front of his own door and putting it away, he always sweeps in front of the door of others. But of course everyone claims that this is not the case and that the other person was so rude and conspicuous as well as rebellious, aggressive and faulty that they could not have failed to notice. But nobody thinks about the fact that this lame excuse is absolutely no excuse at all, because it only reveals their own misconduct all the more. Everyone always wants to be better than their neighbor, because the delusion of self-praise and self-assessment is greater than any honesty in people."

Regardless of the views and reactions of the witnesses, it must be said that the most sensible response to such incidents is definitely to remain silent after the assailant has been clearly and unmistakably called to order by us. Nothing more is necessary. On the contrary, if our letter were made public, it would only have the consequence that this story would be 'warmed up' again and again and lead to endless discussions, which would be a 'disservice' to you.

Injuries inflicted on a person, regardless of whether they are psychological or physical, can only heal if the wounds are left alone and not 'disturbed' again and again by dragging them endlessly into the light of day. This means that you have to deal with it yourself and process it, but that you should not talk about it with too many people, not even with witnesses and those present, who have their own perceptions of the whole thing and their own views on it. Talking about it again and again and trying to get those present on your side, or expecting or even demanding certain reactions from them, has nothing to do with processing and coming to terms with what happened in a sensible way, but everything to do with retaliation and a desire for revenge, which is not neutral but calls for punishment of the person who behaved wrongly and overstepped boundaries that they should have respected. However, this is vigilante justice and the simple exercise of revenge, and this does not help the victimized person, but instead causes what has happened to resurface in them again and again, whereby the inner 'wounds' do not heal, but remain open and get worse and worse.

Apart from that, the fact that people continue to talk about what happened can lead to the formation of parties that turn against each other, which can lead to arguments and discord and to the eventual marginalization of both 'victims' and 'perpetrators', which would only lead to further injury.

The fundamental mistake you made is that you didn't report the incident to us immediately, which would have allowed us to bring the perpetrator to justice immediately and on the spot. This would have prevented further incidents from the outset and the whole thing would not have escalated to the extent that it did. The way we see it, hardly anyone would have noticed the first assault and there would have been no further unpleasantness for you, which would have made everything more bearable for you.

After all, it doesn't matter what the witnesses who referred to the quote from the 169th contact report wanted to express with it. The quote itself is neutral and completely correct and your interpretations of why they sent it to you are purely speculative, and you should refrain from such self-interpretations because you are hurting yourself

This is completely unnecessary, because the views and opinions of others have no relevance to you or to what happened. The only important thing is that you process what has happened for yourself and come to terms with it.

A frank word from Methuselah Meier

about 'Billy' Eduard Albert Meier and the FIGU

About me personally

My name is Methusalem Meier. I was born on October 31, 1973 in Wetzikon (ZH) as the youngest son of 'Billy' Eduard Albert Meier and Kalliope Meier-Zafirio. Our family, which also included my older siblings Gilgamesha and Atlantis, lived at Wihaldenstrasse 10 in Hinwil until I was 4 years old, where the core group of FIGU very quickly began to form after my father's first official contacts with extraterrestrial life forms. On April 7, 1977, we moved to Hinterschmidrüti in the Töss Valley.

The Hinterschmidrüti farm was in a devastating state and I felt as if we had moved onto a battlefield rather than a farm. Even before we moved in, my father and Jacobus Bertschinger began the most necessary repair work on the buildings. They were soon joined by some of the people who had already been coming to Hinwil regularly and talking to my father. It was a busy and very hard time for everyone involved, which demanded everyone's full physical and mental commitment. Under my father's guidance and with his active help, we often worked late into the night or into the early hours of the morning. For most of the volunteers, it was a double burden because they worked in their regular jobs during the day and often came from far away to Hinterschmidrüti in the evening, where they continued to work for a long time. It took around seven years before the worst was over and the times of hard physical work became noticeably easier for everyone. It is thanks in particular to my father's tireless drive to create, his far-sighted planning and his negotiating skills that a particularly good company has emerged under his management and leadership over the past 20 years.

The beginning in Hinterschmidrüti was not an easy time for us children either, as we also experienced some of the strain that was put on everyone. However, we didn't yet understand the extent of the daily drudgery and only saw that our dad was at work from early in the morning until late at night and until his body collapsed. It was only years later that it dawned on me what had actually been going on during this time, and it is a mystery to me where my father always found the energy to motivate people and keep them together.

Today I understand what I couldn't understand before, namely that my father had an extremely important and difficult job to do and that he continued to do it despite his poor health. Unfortunately, my understanding of the difficult circumstances in which my father found himself was only awakened in recent years, when I had to realize how great the attacks from outside were and how much additional pressure he was under from my mother.

The beginnings of FIGU

It is still often said that the FIGU is a cult and that my father is its great guru, but he is not the kind of person who would sit on a 'throne' and keep all work at bay.

He was never the kind of man who could be said to be work-shy or just giving orders. On the contrary, he always set a good example and worked hard and tirelessly, often well into the night and morning hours. Picking, shoveling, paving and concreting were never-ending in the early years - and when everyone else was completely exhausted, he would sit behind the typewriter for days and nights on end and take in contact reports by telepathic transmission. He wrote on the spiritual teachings (from 2023 = creation energy teachings), which he had started in 1979, or on a new book, and he also created the 'Voice of Aquarian Time', which appeared monthly in the first few years and later bimonthly, before it was decided to publish it only once a quarter.

Much of the major work that was done in Hinterschmidrüti was only accomplished under his guidance. All the core group members who joined in the early years had little or no knowledge of construction work etc., and so my father was not only a teacher of the theory of creation energy, but also of work. There was hardly any work that he didn't understand and that he couldn't have shown and taught the men and women in the group in a professional manner. Whether it was construction work, woodwork or agricultural matters, horticulture and garden architecture, housekeeping, shopping or energy issues and electrics, he was and is knowledgeable in all areas and often knows more than the experts. He is also often asked for advice on health care, nutrition and medicine due to his extensive knowledge.

The early years at the center were difficult. Not only because the work was hard and tiring, but also because people with fundamentally different characters clashed, which often led to massive and loud disagreements, the escalation of which was often only stopped by my father's even louder shouting.

The disagreements between the residents of the center and the resulting fights soon made it clear to everyone that a certain order was needed to regulate life together. In addition to these internal difficulties, which demanded a great deal of strength from my father, who held the reins in all situations, there were also attacks from outside, which also demanded his full attention. No sooner had we moved into the Hinterschmidrüti farm than all sorts of people, and especially opponents of my father and his mission, were causing damage to vehicles, buildings and facilities at every possible opportunity. This circumstance and the fact that it wasn't long before the attacks on my father's life, which had already begun in Hinwil, became more frequent, soon made it necessary to introduce a night watch at the center, which initially patrolled the grounds armed until everything had calmed down somewhat.

My father was the real driving force behind the growing FIGU, especially in the early and toughest years. With his one arm (he had lost the other in a car accident in Turkey in the 1960s), he worked harder than all the others, who had two healthy arms but were usually not only ignorant and clumsy when it came to the work to be done, but often also unwilling and unenthusiastic.

Looking back, we can see that even in the first few years at the center, a development began to take shape that would cause my father and FIGU major problems and had a profound impact on our family life. The pressure that my mother exerted on my honest and kind-hearted father with her constant, massive and unfounded accusations and her wild jealousy scenes was so damaging to him over time that he suffered health consequences. The pressure grew from all sides: The core group that had formed was unable to find peace, not least due to my mother and her nasty intrigues; our family life was overshadowed by the fierce battles between my mother, who didn't shy away from any vulgarity or primitiveness, and my father, who used all the means at his disposal to finally bring her to her senses; and then there were the many different attacks from outside, ranging from damage to property, slander and malicious gossip to the attempted kidnapping of my sister and assassination attempts on my father.

One Tuesday morning at around 4.30 a.m. on November 4, 1982, the immense strain that had been falling on my father for years took its toll. He suffered a severe collapse, falling and hitting the back of his head first against a washbasin, then a radiator and finally into a tiled corner before lying unconscious.

As a result of the collapse and the associated accident, my father suffered brain and cerebellar lacerations the size of five-franc pieces, which simply liquefied over time, as was demonstrated by computer tomography scans in the following years. The consequences of the collapse were devastating; not only did father suffer partial amnesia, which in certain respects still persists today, but he also lost many of his faculties of consciousness, with which he had quietly achieved tremendous feats. Sometimes he was so impaired by his life-threatening brain injury that he no longer even recognized us children. As soon as he became aware of the severity of his injuries, he began to fight them vehemently. His extensive and detailed knowledge of brain function, which far surpasses today's scientific knowledge, stood him in good stead and possibly even saved his life. Despite the severity of his injuries, he was able to gradually transfer the functions of the injured parts of the brain to other brain regions, which involved a lengthy and laborious learning process. I still remember well how one day, about six months after the accident, he started to play against a chess computer. Initially, he lost practically every game, but gradually, with tireless persistence, he managed not only to win against the chess computer, but even to outwit it. After the electronics had become worthless to him, he began to play regularly against our core group members, in particular Silvano and Freddy, who were a great help to him thanks to their willingness over the years. For eight long years, my father was often closer to death than to life, and during this time he not only struggled to lead as normal a life as possible, but also wrote his most important work to date, the book 'OM'. Sometimes it seemed as if the only thing keeping him alive was his self-imposed duty to put this work on paper for humanity.

If surviving the collapse was already a miracle for the doctors, my father's achievement of coping with the profound consequences of his brain injury without outside or specialist help and recovering to such an extent that even those around him and those close to him hardly noticed anything was an even greater miracle for them. Only those who have already dealt with the consequences of brain injuries and who know about the often far-reaching tragic and dramatic changes and devastation to the lives of those affected can appreciate what my father has achieved over the years under his own steam and without any outside help. His courage and determination to take on the lonely, oppressive and back-breaking fight against the consequences of his injuries and his inner greatness to refuse even the medical help of the Plejaren with the argument that he did not want to be better off than the rest of humanity is unparalleled on this planet and probably also among all beings in the universe who call themselves human.

In the years after his accident, while my father was fighting for his life, things slowly began to change in the core group. Over time, the members somehow became more insightful, more mature, and they no longer fought over every little thing like toddlers, but gradually took the creation energy teachings more seriously. Their initially modest attempts to put what they had learned into practice in daily life gradually bore fruit. After the tough initial struggles, the work was now carried out more willingly and independently and the more sensible and willing to learn were slowly able to show the way to the more lazy and unwilling. As most of the members continued to learn, the whole group life began to calm down and become more peaceful, and many negative influences from all possible sides lost their power over the more susceptible ones in the course of time, so that the progress became more recognizable. Initially, new members were slow to join the core group, and it was hard for them to find their place and establish themselves. But then, after a break of a few years, they began to join the still small core group in small groups.

Each new member not only brought new problems, but also new impulses and new ideas that helped the existing group to develop further. Some core group members were not up to the task and left the FIGU, and some were too immature or simply had the wrong ideas.

At all times, however, my father was and remained 'the soul' of the FIGU. In his simple and modest way, which makes it impossible for him to see himself as a better person or an 'exalted leader', he captivates those people who are honestly searching for the truth, for progress and development. He continues to live his unpretentious life in modest circumstances and is happy to share everything he has with his fellow human beings. Through his way of seeing and understanding himself as equal and on an equal footing with all other people, he heals many a nasty inner wound in many people. His natural, honest and profound love for people is completely selfless, and with his past life he has a good and formative influence on even the most stubborn and unreasonable people, as long as they only strive for the truth, for honest charity and for progress.

Why is it only my father who has contact with extraterrestrials?

This question has not only been answered by my father himself, but also by a number of other authors, and not least the Plejaren themselves have also commented on it. It seems superfluous to me to go into this question again in detail here, and so I would just like to add one more consideration:

In my opinion, it is not the question or the fact that he maintains contact with extraterrestrials that is decisive, because it is now clear to me and very many people on this earth that we cannot be the only ones in the universe. In my eyes, it is much more about my father continuing his mission, which he has been fulfilling for many incarnations, in this life too. He is not a chosen one of some extraterrestrials who have chosen him to act according to their ideas, but for many incarnations he has been a self-determined and self-responsible teacher of the creative truth, which he has been imparting unwaveringly to people on earth for thousands of years. Only secondarily is he the only human being who is contacted by extraterrestrials from the Plejaren systems and who was chosen by them to ignite the controversy about the possibility of extraterrestrial life and to keep it alive. Apart from my father, the Plejaren had telepathic contact with five other people, three of whom refused to go public because they rightly feared being labeled as crackpots, liars and madmen. Two others who wanted to join forces with my father were unfortunately killed in a car accident before the planned collaboration came about. Unfortunately, the three people who did not dare to go public are no longer among the living.

Extraterrestrials and religions

In my opinion, the fact that my father is accused from many sides of lying, deception, fraud, charlatanry and worse cannot be explained solely by the fact that poor lunatics, envious or ignorant people and know-it-alls cannot or do not want to understand what is going on. Rather, there are a considerable number of people on our planet who have a genuine interest in preventing the truth from coming to light and who therefore, for selfish reasons, vehemently and unbendingly set everything in motion against him that they deem useful for their evil deeds.

The creative truth that my father seeks to spread among people in his mission aims to activate human thinking, to make it autonomous and independent and to make people self-confident and self-responsible, i.e. free in the best sense of the word. This kind of self-responsible freedom, which is practiced by the extraterrestrials and held up as the only possible path of evolution, is the enemy of all religions on our planet. They delude people into a false sense of freedom by lulling them into believing that they are 'supported by God', onto whom they can pass all their worries and problems and who will give them the strength to deal with all their problems and difficulties in return for a faithful and humble belief in him and for singing the praises of his divine glory. This spinning into imaginary processes absorbs people's free thinking and they concentrate solely on the realization of their imaginations rather than on reality. This makes people manipulable and dependent, and they lose access to their original and natural life force, which gives them was given to him by creation. Soft and powerless, he makes himself a slave to unscrupulous exploiters who make him believe in a false 'perfect world' that he is unable to recognize as the hell of bondage.

Changing these circumstances and returning man to his true freedom so that he can seize progress and master his future is the real goal of my father and his extraterrestrial friends. If people on this planet find their way back to the creative laws and commandments and learn to think, act and live according to them, then the greatest danger to the future of humanity will be averted.

As things stand today, however, it seems that many people do not want to take responsibility for what they are doing to the planet and their fellow human beings. This inner refusal to face reality and take responsibility does not only apply to politics, torture, racial discrimination, subjugation and shortchanging of people, but first and foremost to religions, which play a particularly devious and mean game through their 'philosophies' and teachings. It is very easy to confess in church what a bad person you are and then go back to your atrocities because you have been absolved of all your faults and misdeeds by some 'odd man out' who absolved you with a short phrase.

Such soporific and stultifying practices are not my father's goal. His wish is much more that people accept each other and live together in freedom and love, respect each other and treat each other with dignity without exception.

I experienced for myself that he really lives this, because in my early youth I did a lot of things that I regret today. These were not just normal childish things or harmless youthful pranks, no, I was guilty of serious things. In addition, seduced by external influences, I acted against my father and the FIGU for a long time.

After certain experiences led me to realize that my previous approach was not right, I turned to my father. He and FIGU, convinced of my honesty and the seriousness of my efforts, readily gave me the chance to rectify my mistakes and make up for the damage I had done as far as possible. So my father didn't have it easy with me either.

Kalliope Meier-Zafiriou and company

I have already mentioned that our family life was under a bad star. Unfortunately, I have to admit that the main cause of our difficult family circumstances was my mother. She made my father's life hell with her domineering nature, her hatred of everything that didn't submit to her voluntarily, her thirst for revenge, her notorious mendacity and her jealousy of everything and everyone that she thought was better and more capable than her or that really was. As far as I know, she showed him her true character as soon as they were married. And in the time that I can remember, there was hardly a quiet and certainly not a peaceful minute for him around my mother. Nevertheless, he loved her dearly and did everything in his power to help my mother fight against her profound character defects. From time to time it seemed as if his efforts would ultimately be crowned with success, which spurred him on to new endeavors. Unfortunately, it must also be clearly stated that another of my mother's outstanding character traits is her outstanding talent for acting, which she uses to fool people. My father fell for her tricks more than once, until he had to realize that it was all in vain and that his efforts would never lead to success. But even then, he didn't give up and persistently tried to win my mother over until she herself left him and threw it in his face that she didn't feel committed to her marriage.

She was also responsible for most of the differences in the FIGU, as various members soon realized that she was not only scheming with the members, but that she also stole like a magpie and lied and cheated wherever she found the opportunity. Not only did she systematically turn us children against our father, she also knew how to sow in us a deep mistrust of the 'runaway' core group members who 'spread out' in the center and 'took her and her family's place'. It is not surprising that this led to resentment and that we behaved accordingly towards most of them, because we were still too young to see through our mother's evil games.

My mother's deceitful and cowardly games almost led to the collapse of the FIGU on more than one occasion, because she started them even before we moved to Hinterschmidrüti. At the center, however, she gradually took everything to extremes, which is why the core group meeting denied her task after task after it became known how she had handled group property and my father's things. She regularly sold films, photos and books because she was responsible for these sales during the week, but it became a habit for her to embezzle the proceeds and put them in her own pocket. Later, when this task was assigned to another core group member, she simply stole books, films and photos from their respective storage locations, sold them and let the proceeds disappear into her own pocket. She even stole from us children without any scruples, and she proved it with my sister, of all people, who was seriously injured in an accident and was supposed to receive CHF 1100 from the Japanese FIGU group to help with her recovery costs. However, our thieving mother had done the math without the Japanese when she went to the post office to collect the money.

and believed that no one would ever find out about it. When no thank-you letter arrived after some time in Japan, the members of the Japanese group asked my father about the money and its whereabouts. Logically, he knew nothing about such an amount, whereupon he asked my mother if she knew anything about it. She immediately denied vehemently and loudly that any money had come. A day later, she claimed that she had handed over the full amount to my father. Eventually, in her excitement, she became so entangled in contradictions and accusations against my father and the post office that it soon became crystal clear that she knew something about the whereabouts of the money. Dad then followed up the story, whereupon the post office owner requested the signature book for bank transfers in Bern, on the basis of which it could be clearly proven that mother had received the money from Japan and signed for it. But even after father presented her with a copy of the entry with her signature, she denied having received and embezzled the money, even accusing the post office of fraud, before finally claiming that she was entitled to the money, before finally claiming to have lost the money on the way home, but not without loudly accusing my father of having stolen the money.

It wasn't just the slander, insults and intrigues that she repeatedly used to harm my father and the group and that put us children under severe psychological strain. One part of her upbringing consisted of abusing us children behind our father's back and beating us with her fists and feet whenever she deemed it appropriate. I have already mentioned that she also incited and stirred us up against our father and the group members, and so we felt lonely and alone and believed we had the whole world against us. Our reaction to the attempts of the core group members and our father to make friends with us was correspondingly dismissive and malicious because, under the influence of our mother, we considered such behavior to be dishonest and dishonest.

While the divorce battle between my father and my mother was going on, I spoke to her on the phone about her decision. In a rare display of 'honesty', she freely told me a fictitious, absolutely disastrous story, which she later used as an excuse to file for divorce against my father and to milk him financially like a cow, as she put it.

After my parents finally divorced after a long and ugly battle, we hoped that peace would finally return. During the divorce and afterwards, most of us children stuck by our mother and stood by her until we had to realize that the fight was far from over for her even after the divorce and that her purpose in life was to harm our father and FIGU. When I was increasingly confronted with my mother's lies and threatened to become a victim of her malicious intrigues myself, I distanced myself from her and turned my attention back to our father, because the events of the last few years had made me realize that the law was on his side.

Just how far my mother is prepared to go in her hatred and vindictiveness is shown by the fact that for some time now she has been teaming up with Luc Bürgin, a so-called 'journalist' and UFO researcher who is too lazy and apparently incapable of doing any real research and instead confines himself solely to sticking his nose into things he knows nothing about. From this point of view, I can only conclude that birds of a feather flock together, because together with my mother, Bürgin is trying to spread lies and slander by dragging righteous people like my father and the members of the FIGU through the mud in front of the whole world. The fact that these two have teamed up with one of the biggest Billy-haters, namely Kal K. Korff, is only logical, because all three of them are full of incomprehension and drooling hatred against my father, whom they hope to destroy with their machinations. But they are obviously so blinded and stupid that they can't see that the damage they are doing will ultimately be a success for my father and the FIGU. Just as I turn in disgust against the machinations of my mother and her satellites, many others will distance themselves from her and her lies in the knowledge of the truth. However, I don't think it's a pity for those who fall for her and stick with her.

As I said, my father is in the right in every respect, and he will not be lured out of the reserve by the drooling intrigues of Kalliope Meier and her ilk. Father pursues the best of all strategies that a person who is in the right can pursue: He simply lets the impostor Korff, the loudmouth Bürgin and my mendacious mother go nowhere, because he has no time to worry about slanderers and no-goods etc.

As is so often the case, this triumvirate will ultimately backfire, especially as Korff's so-called research is based on fantasy and pure fabrication. He has often misused my father's photographs as forgeries in order to discredit him in public. Korff's methods and the outrageous stories he spins can be read in FIGU Bulletin No. 14 of March 1998 and in the pamphlet 'A Refutation of Korff's False Claims and Distortions', which was written by James W. Deardorff, a distinguished research professor at Oregon State University.

Korff may have visited the center, but it had little to do with real research. Because if honesty had been his intention, he would hardly have shown up under the false name of Steve Thomas. Someone explain to me why someone has to act under a false name if his intentions are clear and he has nothing to fear.

has. I rather think that Korff is the same dishonest and ignorant guy as Luc Bürgin, who simply writes and publishes a slanderous story about Billy Meier in order to make money and to attach the nice-sounding name UFO RESEARCHER to himself. Korff and Bürgin could earn their money in an honest way if they would honestly call themselves VERLEUMDUNGSGESCHICHTEN- or MÄRCHENSCHREIBER, but for that they lack "s Füdli" in good Swiss German, which means that they are cowardly wimps and have proven that so far. Apart from being cowards, they are also dumber than straw, because they don't realize that by shouting and nagging they are drawing the world's attention to my father in the first place, thereby not only laying another foundation stone for his success, but also building up the brickwork of his mission. Very few people are as stupid as Korff, Bürgin and my mother believe, because those who matter to my father and FIGU and who are capable of helping them in their mission, those people are independent enough in their thinking and in their views to convince themselves of the facts on the spot, and once they have got that far, then my father and FIGU have won the game, because sooner or later the truth will still have spoken for itself.

However, I will always stand by what is written here and, above all, I will always stand by my father. I allowed myself to be misled by my mother long enough until I finally became clever enough to recognize the truth. I believe that you can always speak the truth at any time without having to fear the consequences. Today, I can confirm with a clear conscience that everything my father does and says is true, because I could and can see the facts for myself. Some people will find it difficult to understand that I am accusing my mother of lying, but isn't she doing the same to me when she claims that the sightings, buzzing noises and photographs that I have witnessed myself on various occasions are dishonest machinations on the part of my father? The advantage of my statements for me is that I can prove everything I have said and that my father's material has been examined many times and found to be genuine. The siren noises, of which tapes still exist today, are of a range and quality that could not have been achieved even with the most modern equipment at the time, and that speaks for itself.

Who is 'Billy' Meier?

Many people may think that my father was born under special circumstances or omens. Such assumptions do not correspond to the facts, because my father was born on February 3, 1937 in Bülach (ZH), the son of a shoemaker and a housewife. In those days, working-class children were expected to work hard at an early age, so my father soon learned to pitch in with his daily work. Up to the age of five, my father had a completely normal childhood for the time, apart from the extraordinary aspects of his own development.

The other details of my father's life story are quoted with the author's permission from Guido Moosbrugger's book '... und sie fliegen doch!

"Through his contacts with extraterrestrials, which he practiced for the first time at the age of five, he learned a lot, but he separated himself more and more from his peers and thus became an outsider and troublemaker - both in the village and school community as well as in his own family. This is the only way to understand why he was always blamed for all the bad things that happened. But instead of defending himself, he was silent as the grave about all the accusations that were unjustly leveled at him. The further consequence of this was that he was declared uneducable and sent to various reformatories. But of course nobody wanted to keep such a strange fellow around for long, so he was shunted from one place to another. When the constant shuffling back and forth became too much for him, he took off without further ado, roamed the woods all alone and fed on whatever food he could find. Eventually, however, he was picked up again and again and taken to a new location, where the same game was repeated - for around four years.

Finally, one fine day, he was locked up in a psychiatric clinic, where he was examined for his 'mental state', among other things. After being treated very badly here, he decided to flee the country, which he actually managed to do under extremely difficult and life-threatening circumstances. In any case, he made his way across the border to France and enlisted in the Foreign Legion at the age of 15. There, he soon realized that this step had been a mistake, as escaping from the legion seemed virtually impossible. Nevertheless, he still managed this feat and was able to escape to the other bank of the Rhine. When he returned to Switzerland, he reported to the authorities. Inexplicably, however, he still remained silent about all kinds of accusations; and after his above-average intelligence was recognized by the psychologists and psychiatrists at the Rheinau Cantonal Clinic, he was put on trial and sentenced to 4½ years in prison. Although he was basically in prison for years without guilt, he simply couldn't bring himself to defend himself. But somehow even the negative has a positive purpose to fulfill, and this seems to have been the case here. This extremely tough lesson served as excellent preparation for the difficult tasks he still had to master. From today's perspective, Billy is of the following opinion: 'The prison and institutional time was not simply useless, I must confess, because during this time I learned a lot more in terms of consciousness.

than I could ever have learned in freedom. A very important learning factor for me was also the realization that a person must be humble and selfless in order to be truly human.

After he had served his time, nothing could keep him back in Switzerland, and so he set off on a trek through 42 countries in Europe, Africa and Asia. By the time he returned to Switzerland in 1969, he had covered a total of around 2,500,000 km in 12 years, of which about 1/10 was on foot, the rest by bicycle, car, truck, bus, boat, small plane, helicopter and train; of course, his means of transportation also included the horse and camel as well as the donkey and ox cart, and especially in India, of course, the elephant. This opportunity allowed him to get to know the country and its people and gain important experience. Completely destitute, he seized every work opportunity that presented itself in order to earn his daily bread. Under the pressure of necessity, Billy learned and practiced no fewer than 352 different professions at short notice. In many cases, he had very little time to learn a job that was completely new to him. From time to time he was granted a slightly longer period, but he never had enough time for an apprenticeship lasting several years, as is generally the case. On one occasion, he took on tasks in which he was able to put his extensive knowledge of theology, theosophy, psychology and psychiatry to good use - namely as a priest and pastor, medicine man, village doctor and cattle doctor. At other times he worked as a bricklayer, glass mason, carpenter and marble cutter, as a painter and plumber, etc. He is also skilled in forestry, agriculture, road construction, landscaping and so on. As far as his typing skills are concerned, he could rival any typist. In West Pakistan, he worked as a smuggler, which was considered a respectable occupation there. He also earned his living as a German teacher, blaster, security guard, special agent against criminal activities and private detective. In the latter capacity, he eventually lost his left arm. Of course, the many jobs he held later stood him in good stead when setting up the center in Hinterschmidrüti.

He also devoted himself to the study of all world religions and gained a clear picture of the most important world views. To enrich his knowledge, he was not afraid to temporarily join various sects and secret societies. For the purpose of instruction, he even stayed with the wise men in India, whose existence is hardly known to the world public, as they live in seclusion like hermits and hardly ever appear in public.

A heavy blow of fate struck him on August 4, 1965 in Iskenderun, Turkey. As already mentioned, he lost his left arm in a bus accident there. He was left lying unconscious in the ditch for four hours under the assumption that he was dead. It was only later that the mistake was realized - but too late to save his arm. Unfortunately, the necessary amputation was carried out under catastrophic conditions and anything but professionally, so that Billy had to suffer from more or less severe phantom pain in the remaining arm stump for the rest of his life.

On December 25 of the same year, he met his wife Kalliope in Greece and became engaged to her on January 25, 1966. Due to difficulties within the family, he stole his bride on February 25, 1966 and married her after various complications on March 25, 1966 in Korinthos. This marriage produced three children, Gilgamesha, Atlantis and Methuselah. Unfortunately, the problems and conflicts did not stop at his own doorstep, so that he did not have an easy life in the family either. But as incomprehensible as it may sound to some, this also had its purpose, because Billy needed two strong pillars of the first order to be able to cope with his strenuous task.

Anyone who knows Billy casually or only by reputation may be disappointed to discover or hear that neither his origins nor his habitus indicate anything special about him. He has no material wealth, no prestigious social or state position and no illustrious professional title - not even a high school education, let alone a doctorate. The only thing he can show in this respect is his honorary title Sheik Muhammed Abdulla, conferred by the Ahmdiyya Mosque in Karachi/West Pakistan. (His wife Kalliope was given the honorary title of Sheika Aischa Abdulla.) In addition, Billy was awarded the master title of fifth dan 'honoris causa' in August 1988 on behalf of all Japanese karate clubs. But apart from that, he is apparently just an inconspicuous man who perhaps just wants to make himself important. On the surface, he is no more than any other person who has weaknesses as well as merits. He also makes mistakes that are absolutely necessary for his further development. The worst disappointment is for those people who think Billy absolutely has to wear a halo over his head, but that's not the case either. But outward appearances are deceptive, as the old saying goes, and in Billy's case, I have to say, they are very deceptive. Only a few people have actually recognized his true greatness because his talents are largely hidden and because he doesn't make his mark in public for everyone to see. This is also one of the main reasons why Billy hasn't given any interviews for years (with very few exceptions), so as not to give the impression that he just wants to put himself in the spotlight as a world-famous contact man. Only those who really know Billy really know what he can do and what he is made of. Without wanting to sing his praises, I can't help but say that he is an exceptional person in many respects. His knowledge and skills alone

His manual skills and, above all, his versatility are definitely admirable. However, his greatest strength lies on a completely different level. This does not refer to material knowledge of all kinds, which he also possesses in abundance, but to knowledge of the energy of creation, which contains completely different facts than is usually assumed. Creation energy knowledge and skills can only be acquired through intensive study of the so-called creation energy theory. This mainly concerns the universally valid laws and commandments of nature and creation, as well as the application and functioning of the power of creation and the like.

To acquire such knowledge and skills, Billy was dependent on extraterrestrial help and it is therefore understandable that he has been in contact with extraterrestrial intelligences from an early age, sometimes in telepathic form, but in most cases personally face-to-face and through inspirations he occasionally receives from very high, immaterial forms of creation energy. I will go into more detail in the next chapter.

In and of itself, it is nothing unusual for UFO contactees to be more or less hostile. Unfortunately, this is particularly true for Billy. In order to prevent the dissemination of the truth at all costs, certain circles tried to silence him by simply transporting him to the afterlife. In 1975/76 alone, he was the target of three dastardly assassination attempts.

His enemies described him as a mixture of Einstein and Till Eulenspiegel or called him a charlatan and fraudster, which is still the case today in some cases. But despite all the intrigues and slander - sometimes even from within his own ranks - not one iota of what evil tongues would like to present as truth has been proven to date.

A completely new phase in Billy's life began on January 28, 1975, when the 11-year contact period with the Plejarin Semjase was initiated. This point in time can be regarded as the actual beginning of his missionary work, which he was to carry out as a proclaimer of the unadulterated truth and as a pioneer of a better future. Since then, he has no longer pursued a normal professional activity, but has worked tirelessly to fulfill his difficult task.

However, it would go far too far to list all the many obligations and activities that Billy now had to cope with despite all the adverse circumstances. In the spring of 1977, he moved from his original home in Hinwil to Hinterschmidrüti in the Töss Valley in the Zurich Oberland, where his home is today. It bears the euphonious name 'Semjase-Silver-Star-Center', in honor of his extraterrestrial girlfriend Semjase, who was particularly active in all matters during the construction phase. This is also the headquarters of FIGU, which was founded by Billy in August 1975, but whose actual founding meeting did not take place until later, on June 17, 1978 in Hinterschmidrüti. FIGU is the abbreviation for 'Freie Interessengemeinschaft Universell' - a non-profit association and a community of seekers and researchers in the spirit of universal truth, etc. The whole area of the center includes a few hectares of forest, as well as good land used for agriculture, a farmhouse and some smaller outbuildings. When we took over this farm, we were greeted by a miserable hovel of a so-called dwelling house, surrounded by mire, a dilapidated shed and land all around that was desolately overgrown. It therefore took years of hard work and dedication from everyone involved to restore it to its current state, which can easily be described as 'paradisical' compared to before."

The statements from Moosbrugger's book (note Diversikum) are confirmed by all the people who have known my father since his childhood or since his younger years, because they all agree that he never rested on his laurels, but often worked like a robot and continued to strive towards a goal that was still invisible to his fellow human beings. Even if the Plejaren supported him in his learning, this did not mean that his conscious work was taken away from him by apparatus or devices, because even the Plejaren could not use the much-vaunted 'Nuremberg funnel' to take away his learning. And so my father had to learn more and harder than all other people on this earth, because the goal he had to achieve was far above the goals that people on our earth are capable of setting for themselves.

Two of my experiences

In June 1976, Hans Schutzbach drove with my mother Kalliope, my older siblings Gilgamesha and Atlantis and Amata Stetter, an older woman who was interested in Billy's contacts, to Oberdörfli Riet in Betzholz near Hinwil. Dad had driven ahead of us on his moped and then left us waiting a few hundred meters from the contact location. On this eventful day, he met up with Quetzal, Semjase and their sister Pleija. My then six-year-old brother Atlantis was the first to spot a silver-grey, round object in the cloudless sky, which rose above the forest only about 300 meters away. We were amazed when it quickly gained altitude and flew off in a westerly direction. We were able to follow the ship for almost ten minutes, and I remember that day and my impressions vividly, even though I was only three years old at the time.

Hans Schutzbach had urged my father again and again to give him permission to take photos of the blasting ships during daytime sightings. However, my father had warned him against this and explained to him that he would not be able to take decent pictures at such a time anyway because he would be far too nervous at the sight of a blasting ship. In fact, things turned out exactly as father had predicted. When the ship was noticed by Atlantis, who immediately drew everyone's attention to it, Hans Schutzbach began to run around in a completely uncontrolled manner, and when he had finally caught himself to the point where we thought he was finally ready to take pictures, his camera fell out of his hand. Several times, out of sheer excitement, he accidentally reached for the camera lying on the ground, which slipped out of his clearly trembling hands each time, until he finally managed to take a single, but barely usable picture of the ship, which was already far away and appeared as small as a pinhead. What a pity that he wasted such a rare opportunity with his emotionally charged and uncool reaction.

Many people think that extraterrestrials should land in public, but they reject this as too dangerous. Having witnessed as a four-year-old how a man can go crazy when he actually sees a blasting ship, even though he knows about extraterrestrials and UFOs, I fear the reactions of the public just as much as the Plejaren do. Unfortunately, the people of our planet are not yet ready for such contact. This will only be the case when we earthlings learn to accept the alien and meet it in peace and harmony, which, it seems to me, may still take some time.

Four years later, in the summer of 1980, at Sädelegg between Schmidrüti and Sitzberg in the Zurich Oberland, I was able to experience the sound that such a blasting ship is capable of producing. Back then, on a warm summer evening, my mother and I, my siblings Atlantis and Gilgamesha as well as Engelbert, Maria and Conny Wächter, Jacobus Bertschinger and Eva Bieri had set off for Sädelegg 'armed' with tapes on my father's instructions. Dad positioned us at various points about 200 meters from the contact point, which we could fully see, and instructed the adults to stop anyone who was curious. It had just started to rain lightly when, a few minutes after Dad left us, a distant deafening buzz 'cut' the air. I felt as if my hearing was about to be shredded, because the sound reached an intensity that I had never heard before or since. Mother had taken her own sound recorder with her at the time and father had given her such a good location that she managed to get the best recordings. Twice before, my father had tried to capture the whirring of the ships on tape, but both times troublemakers and wonder-noses had turned up and thwarted my father's intentions. Only now, when he had taken his men with him, who promptly kept all the gawkers away from the contact point, did the undertaking succeed.

These two experiences were two of my most important experiences and without the permission of the Plejaren, neither the other people present nor I would ever have been able to experience such things, which will always remain closed to other people. It is therefore all the more incomprehensible that my mother, who shares these experiences with me and the other people present, turns against father and hatefully tries to drag everything she has seen and heard into the mud. Many people on this planet would give anything to be able to experience something like this, but my mother obviously doesn't appreciate it or she is incapable of realistically processing what she has seen and experienced and drawing sensible conclusions from it, otherwise I can't explain her behavior.

Kill Billy Meier - why?

By 1998, a total of 16 assassination attempts had been made on my father (note: by 2024 there had already been 25 attacks), with various witnesses present who were even at risk of being hit by a bullet themselves, such as Dr. Sarvepalli Radhakrishnan, religious philosopher and President of India 1962-1967, as well as Mrs. Fisk and Cristal Rogers on Dog Hill in the Ashoka compound in Mehrauli; then once each Elsi Moser and Amata Stetter in the Center compound, twice Silvano Lehmann and once Engelbert Wächter. A third time, Billy and Silvano were traveling by car when the windshield was shot into and damaged in Saland and they saw the shooter, who immediately ran off with a rifle in his hands and disappeared. Silvano was not going to let this happen and drove straight to Pfäffikon to report the incident to the police. The police officer present just laughed and said that a stone from a passing truck had probably hit the windshield and broken it, although he was clearly told that the shooter had been seen and that there were no other cars on the road at the time. Daniel L. was also at risk, but fortunately the bullet - which was fired from a trailer shelter about 30 meters away - ricocheted off a tree and went off without causing any damage. Also the attack, when Lt. Col. Wendelle C. Stevens, USAF (ret.) was once present and thus a witness when Billy was shot at. The two were sitting together on the divan in front of the house, having a conversation, when suddenly Billy was shot at from the footpath below - about 50 meters away - with a large-calibre weapon. The bullet whizzed just past Billy's head and hit the wall, blowing off a palm-sized piece of plaster, after which the 9mm bullet fell down and disappeared under the divan, where my sister Gilgamesha retrieved it. Then

In 2023, Willem Mondria and Mariann Uehlinger, who were sitting in front of the house entrance with Billy, would also have been in danger, and if it hadn't been for a stupid mishap on the part of the shooter, when the shot ricocheted skywards as another attempt was made to shoot Billy from the hiking trail, then one or two people would have been hit. The 1st assassination attempt in Switzerland took place in Hinwil in January 1976. (Note: All attacks, except for the first one in Mehrauli, India, which was effectively witnessed by well-known witnesses, were carried out in Switzerland). The first one was committed when I was just over two years old. My father was in his study on the first floor, where he was busy printing a small magazine, the 'Stimme der Wassermannzeit', when suddenly a shot rang out and the window pane shattered. The bullet, which had been fired at Father from a rifle outside, missed him so narrowly that he could feel the airflow from the bullet on his head. The projectile then ricocheted off a copper spiral hanging from the ceiling and drilled into the office ceiling, where it left a large hole. It was only years later, when we had been living in Hinterschmidrüti for a long time, that my father was visited by a strange woman who confessed to the attack and credibly assured him that she deeply regretted the crime and apologized. She had been prompted to commit the murder because she belonged to a sect in Bülach whose abstruse doctrines held that extraterrestrial life was not only impossible, but simply the devil (see 'Voice of the Age of Aquarius', No. 23, pages 12-14). As early as my father's childhood, various members of the sect turned against my father, incited by a Mrs. Horat, as a result of which Billy was constantly hounded and even persecuted in many countries, which is why he was also shot at in India. From her point of view at the time, the woman who contacted Billy was only trying to protect mankind from the direct influence of Satan, as she said when she apologized to Billy. Only later, when she began to see through the religious heresies of the sect and was able to detach herself from them, was she able to recognize that there could be nothing devilish about my father's contacts, and her guilty conscience then prompted her to go and see father and confess everything to him, who left it at that, as is his way, and didn't make a fuss about it, but simply let what had happened be forgotten as having happened, because it couldn't be changed anyway. What's more, a sincere apology is worth so much to him that he simply walks away from what happened and forgets everything for all time. However, two things are typical of this incident: on the one hand, it is my father's fearlessness with which he strengthens his mission and makes it truthful through his behaviour in this way, whereby he consciously and deliberately steps on the toes of many people as well as associations, groups and organizations, which is why he is naturally a thorn in their side; on the other hand, it is also his generosity and selflessness with which he accepted the apology from the perpetrator who had made a serious attempt to extinguish his life. Hardly any other person would be able to overlook such an act with such equanimity without screaming bloody murder afterwards and immediately calling the police on the delinquent, because after all, the crime was far from time-barred - and I don't know whether it was time-barred, but that doesn't matter to my father - when the perpetrator turned up at my father's house and made a full confession, which would have put her behind bars for years according to the letter of the law. Dad, however, doesn't see things like this from the perspective of a normal person, but has his own attitude to such things, which enabled him to recognize the woman's honest remorse and to accept her apology generously. Because of this and the other assassinations, which often came about under rather obscure circumstances, I ask myself why the life of a man who is supposed to be just a swindler and fraudster is being sought with such frequency? Are there perhaps people out there who know the truth about my father and his mission and to whom he might be dangerous? Or is it, for whatever reason, simply to prevent the real knowledge of extraterrestrial life from becoming public knowledge among the general population? I think one of these reasons will probably apply, because nobody tries to eliminate a human being for nothing - just think of the 'Men in Black', who often got in my father's way.

The fact is that father, the FIGU members and many other people are doing everything they can to help the truth to break through in every respect. It is not only religions and sects that keep humanity away from the knowledge of the truth, from progress and therefore also from further development, but also many other movements, groups and organizations for whom a lazy and comfortable, effeminate and easily manipulated humanity fits perfectly into their concept.

However, the indoctrination of the Christian religions and their sects, as well as other religions and their sects, are the worst in their effects on people's thinking. They deliberately withhold from humanity the true events that took place around 'Jesus Christ', whose real name was Jmmanuel, and other religious founders. Worse still, Jmmanuel's teaching, the teaching based on the Creation energy teaching, has been twisted, falsified and changed to such an extent that today it enslaves the thinking of religious people and confines them within narrow limits instead of liberating them, making them great, independent and wise. Through the machinations of power-hungry religious bigwigs and their often stupid and ignorant or blinded helpers, it has been possible to turn the truth into its opposite and to present this opposite as desirable, as is also the case in all other existing religions and sects that have emerged falsely from the everlasting teaching of Jmmanuel or from other teachings or even false teachings of earthly people. Millions upon millions

Since time immemorial, people have been so alienated from their destiny to be truly human that they are only able to find their way with great difficulty - if at all.

All Christian, Islamic and Jewish heresies, together with their countless sects, refer to the books of the Old Testament, which supposedly contain the true teachings of Immanuel and other prophets, whereby Christianity in particular also has the New Testament at its disposal for its incredible fraud and deception. It has long been known, and it is openly admitted by the Christian religions, that these books were often written centuries after the actual events. The 46 books of the Old Testament were pieced together from various traditions over hundreds of years, usually long after the protagonists had passed away. Everything that is counted as the Old Testament today was only recorded on the basis of oral traditions, and not a single book was written by the person whose name it bears. The 27 books of the New Testament are no better, as they were also written long after the death of the people involved and, as with the Old Testament, in no case is the author identical to the person to whom the book is attributed. The entire Christian religion is therefore based solely on stories that its writers knew only from hearsay. As the old saying goes: "You learn to lie from hearsay."

Although my father is very knowledgeable about the origins of the Bible, he didn't stop me from attending religious education classes at school. This experience was very important for me because, on the one hand, I didn't take everything my father told me at face value and, on the other hand, I was curious about what religions had to offer. Fortunately, my father never told me what and what I should believe in. Today I have realized that only those people who know nothing need to believe, and that those who know nothing have learned nothing. And that is exactly what religions and many politicians aim to do, namely to create fear by believing in what people are told, which makes it easy to keep everyone under control. My father stands up against these and other machinations. He is certainly not a flawless person or a saint, because he is just like any other person, and as such he also makes mistakes from which he has to learn just like everyone else.

Is the FIGU a commercial association?

The FIGU is a statutory non-profit organization that sustains itself solely through the work and contributions of its members. Money raised from the sale of my father's writings or from the sale of materials such as films, photos, postcards, T-shirts etc. not only has to be properly accounted for, but it also goes straight back into the mission, where it is used to print new writings or create new materials. Another part of the money that goes to FIGU flows into an aid campaign founded by my father called 'Russia Aid' or 'Russia Aid'.

'Active Alliance', which regularly supported needy families in the former Soviet Union with food, clothing and medicines until 1998. To ensure that the association is not guilty of embezzlement and misappropriation, every penny has to be accounted for, and as the money belongs solely to the association, none of it flows into the pockets of my father, who does not even receive a salary from the FIGU, although he works for them full-time. The only 'privilege' he enjoys - and which he had to be talked into with the greatest patience and the tongues of angels - is that his apartment in the center is rent-free. Initially, he vehemently resisted even this concession from the FIGU, and it was only when even the Plejaren intervened and put their foot down that he reluctantly gave in.

I am often accused that father and the FIGU are supposed to earn millions through the sale of books, photos and films. A lie that grew out of my money-hungry mother, who was hoping for these alleged millions when she divorced my father. However, neither my father nor FIGU have such sums of money. Father certainly doesn't, as he only lives on a small disability pension of a few hundred francs a month. He can't make any great leaps or rake in millions with that, as any normal person would realize.

If the millions that my mother fantasizes about were available, FIGU would probably not be considered a non-profit association, and the members of the core group would certainly not have to take on the daily multiple burden of work, home work and group work to ensure the survival of the association and its financial security. The 'unworldly and unrealistic' core group members, of all people, have to stand their ground day after day in their professional lives to ensure that there is enough money to cover the maintenance costs of the entire center month after month. What my father and the core group members have always said in public is really true: the core group members and my father bear the costs of maintaining the buildings and grounds with their work alone. The core group members' monthly contributions are not exactly small, and yet it is not the case, as is also claimed, that they have to hand over their entire salary to my father. Basically, it's not much different from a normal apartment building, where each party also has to pay their rent, the only difference is that the FIGU association owns the property and its members have to pay through their own contributions.

Their rent keeps the association alive. Father is therefore neither the owner of Hinterschmidrüti nor does he own the association, which has long stood on its own two feet and is self-sustaining.

These are facts that can be verified by anyone, because the FIGU and its members do not hide anything. They answer all questions openly at any time, and anyone who does not want to believe their word can freely check the facts with the authorities and offices.

The so-called insider knowledge that my mother spreads about this, her fantasies of psychological terror and the members' bondage to my father, the abstruse stories about millions and the easy life that my father allegedly led and is still supposed to lead, stem solely from her morbid and twisted way of thinking, which is nourished by her terrible character flaws, to which she surrenders without a fight and which she boasts about in public. Unfortunately, I haven't seen much of the supposed love that mother has for my father and the high song she sings in public today, because otherwise everything would have turned out differently.

On our own behalf

After everything I have seen and experienced in connection with my parents and the FIGU, I could not help but take the delicate step of going public after careful consideration. I cannot judge how you, dear reader, will take what I have told you here, but please bear in mind that everything I have laid out before your eyes corresponds to the bitter truth, which I can stand by at any time. My guiding principle is not to take revenge on my mother and give my father a free pass with my words, but rather I feel an obligation to create a small counterweight through my statements, which should help to straighten out my father's image, which has been completely thrown off balance by lies and false accusations.

I would like to suggest to those people who oppose my father's work that they should seriously consider the issues that my father and the FIGU bring to them. If people understood the importance of the message that my father received from the Plejaren and if they tried to live according to the laws and commandments of creation, they would realize that life on our planet would be much easier and better than it has been up to now. People should learn to treat each other with respect and charity and to accept each other as they are. However, this also includes being helpful to each other instead of just leading a self-centered life. Everyone knows from their own experience the need to be able to confide in someone, and how many of us would have been happy many times if a helpful and selfless friend had been at our side when we had problems. I'm not saying that you should take people's problems off their hands, but good advice or a helpful deed are not out of place for a person who is courageously facing life's struggles. Real friendship is unfortunately rare among us humans, and at the bottom of our hearts we all long for a life without violence, hatred, envy, jealousy, subjugation, fear, paternalism, terror and war etc., and we all want the same thing, namely love, peace and security and a little prosperity so that we can live carefree.

Unfortunately, it took me a long time to come to this realization, because until recently I too was only interested in my own benefit. It was only the events of the last few months that got me thinking, and for the first time I seriously considered what my father explained to me in private. In particular, I have begun to study his writings more seriously over the past few months, and this has made me realize that it is my duty as a human being to change my life and openly stand by the truth. From this I have also drawn the strength to have the above recorded in writing, with the intention of helping the facts to break through.

It must be clearly stated here that this little piece of writing did not come about at the request of my father or the FIGU, nor under any kind of duress. My opinion is that father has done and continues to do so much for me and his other children that it is nothing more than right and proper for me to raise my voice for him here and stand behind him. After what we witnessed and saw as children, it seems to me that it is high time we finally started to actively support my father's work so that we can continue it to a certain extent at a later date. Of course, I don't imagine that I can follow in my father's footsteps, as I lack his knowledge, understanding, wisdom and awareness, but I can do what he wanted me to do, namely to steer my life in the right direction and, through my attitude, to set an example to others through my thoughts and actions, my thoughts and my actions to set an example for those people who, with their eyes wide open, are looking for a new path that is sustainable enough to lead them into a future worth living and worthy of humanity, and the path based on the theory of creation energy is certainly that.

My father often said and explained things to me that I neither wanted to hear nor understand, and he often stepped on my toes with his truths. Nevertheless, I am very grateful to have such a father, because he was able to gain infinitely more experience in his life than any other person I know. My father's knowledge and wisdom is a great treasure for us children, and we can always benefit from his advice. Through his dealings with thousands of people, my father has acquired a knowledge of human nature that is second to none - and he always treats everyone with the appropriate respect and consideration, regardless of who they are and what they do. This behavior alone is worthy of emulation and places him high about most people I have met who like to distribute their respect and esteem according to their sympathies instead of accepting everyone as a human being. Anyone who gets to know my father personally and who has had shorter or longer dealings with him cannot say anything bad or negative about him, because he treats everyone equally well.

Those who spread vile lies and untruths about my father should occasionally find out what their hatred of my father and his work is really based on, because he has certainly done them no more harm than he has done anyone else. Those who have never been to the Center in person and yet think they know everything about the FIGU and my father and spread their lies should get their butts up on the mountain above Wila and, if they are capable of doing so, question the group members with a neutral attitude and discuss things with them.

Father is certainly not a superhuman, and I do not want to portray him as such, but we should at least try to see him neutrally for what he is and at least somewhat estimate his efforts for the conscious well-being of humanity. I can assure those people who are unable to understand and share his views and philosophy that they have nothing to fear from father, because nothing is further from his mind than to misunderstand, and the members of FIGU act just like him. So it seems only right and proper to me to conclude by asking his opponents to simply leave him alone, because he is not disturbing their peace either.
